

A Message from President Catanese

*I*t's been an exciting and wonderful journey thus far in our first half century. Florida Institute of Technology has come of age—and is now a leader in its own time.

We speak often of Florida Tech's humble beginnings 50 years ago, while taking great pride in the evolution of that fledgling night school into this internationally recognized and respected center of learning and research. Innovation and discovery have been our touchstones.

The spirit with which we undertook the Golden Anniversary Campaign is inextricably woven into the fabric of who we are as researchers, scientists and educators. We look to the horizon and see not only what is, but what could be. When others ask why, we ask why not?

The wonderment that lies in the realization of a dream sparks our enthusiasm for this amazing institution with its distinguished faculty, dedicated staff and committed students. We achieve together.

A treasured bit of ancient wisdom states that a journey of 1,000 miles begins with a single step. The people of Florida Tech walk arm-in-arm with you. While no longer at the beginning of our journey, it is gratifying to resolutely travel a path to success that few could have contemplated in 1958. We thank you for joining us on this amazing trip.

A Message from the Campaign Chairman

The Golden Anniversary Campaign for Florida Tech has been a shining moment in the history of Florida Institute of Technology. Never before have so many given of their time, talent and treasure to help provide a secure future for this university. All contributors, large and small, deserve sincere thanks and praise for their generosity.

As I reflect on the campaign, I'm particularly gratified to consider the thousands of students who will reap its benefits. Students from all walks of life, socioeconomic backgrounds, cultures and countries now have new opportunities to pursue their dreams of an education thanks to expanded scholarship funds. Those seeking the latest in technology can look no further than the university's enhanced physical resources. New faculty and new programs will give these students the means to pursue their educational ambitions and to succeed in whatever career path they may follow.

Playing a leading role at Florida Tech reminds me of my experiences at Harris Corporation—a great adventure in a fast-changing world. Few things compare to the sense of accomplishment surrounding the exploration of science and technology.

The 21st century workplace demands much from its employees. Corporations seeking to find the latest competitive advantages for their products and services are searching for the best educated people to work on their teams. The same school that trained men and women to send America to the moon is now the university that is properly poised to exploit the discoveries of a new century.

Thank you for what you do for Florida Tech and its students.

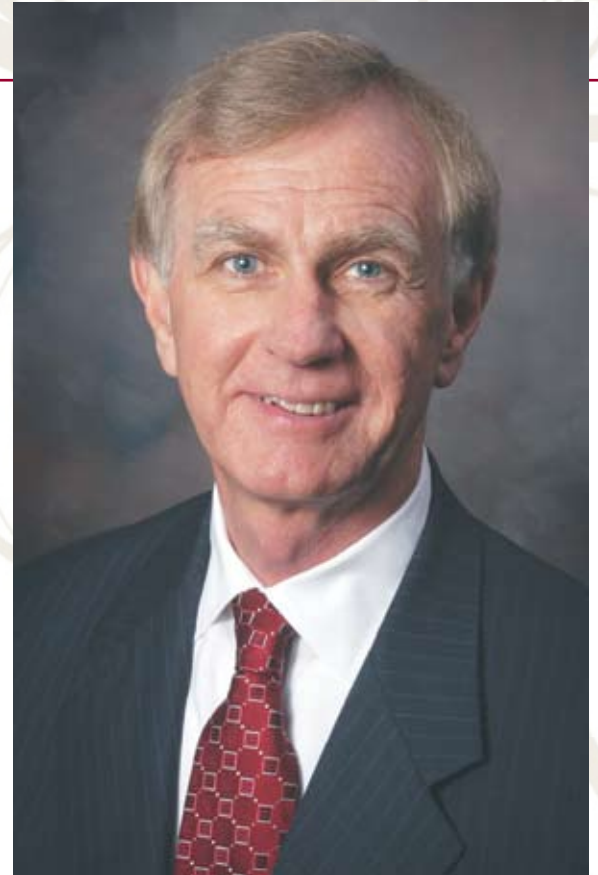

A Message From the Board Chairman

*I*t's been said that "There are no shortcuts to life's greatest achievements." Hard work, determination and perseverance are the hallmarks of accomplishment. The Golden Anniversary Campaign for Florida Tech has been no different—no shortcuts, only a deeply held conviction that additional financial support can be transformational.

The process of completing this successful campaign has inspired us to look inward, as we focus on quantifying the resources needed to advance the university's mission. An earnest commitment to education and innovation is at the core of our decision-making. The storied legacy of this wonderful university stretches from the Earth to the moon and beyond, with new discoveries awaiting our investigation.

As the talented students who graduate into the ranks of our alumni work to change this world for the better, their accomplishments give us new reason for pride. No challenge is insurmountable for talented people who persevere. Florida Tech's faculty and staff share that belief, always keeping that commitment to our students.

The Florida Tech family expresses its deepest gratitude to the many supporters who have spent half a century nurturing the success of this tremendous institution in ways both large and small. Your support secures a brighter future for us all.

A Message from the Senior Vice President for Advancement

*F*or many people, philanthropy is about legacy—a way to leave the world a better place. The dictionary itself defines philanthropy as an “altruistic concern for human welfare and advancement, usually manifested by donations of money, property, or work.” Well-known business leader Lee Iacocca described it simply as people “kind enough to spend their money to educate people that they would never get to know.”

Philanthropy Florida Tech-style is all these things, and so many more, as witnessed by the unparalleled success of this Golden Anniversary Campaign.

Funds for new faculty. Money for new buildings and programs. Dollars for student scholarships. The revenue raised through this landmark effort has been transformational in the life of the university—similar to the scale in which the Olin gift in the previous decade transformed Florida Tech. Foundations, corporations, individuals—all have stepped forward to affirm their belief in this university and its future. All have invested in that intangible yet all-important idea that Florida Tech’s brightest days are yet to dawn.

As one philanthropic chapter closes, another will soon open. We will not simply warm ourselves by the glow of this success—but will use this success to light the way for future accomplishment. We look forward to earning your continued support.

Reflecting on Stellar Beginnings

Florida Institute of Technology has been reaching for the stars for half a century, gaining national as well as international acclaim for its contributions in education and research.

The institution's story is one of humble beginnings shaped by the swelling tides of the Space Coast. Fifty years ago, Florida Institute of Technology founder Jerome P. Keuper, Ph.D., was working at Cape Canaveral for RCA, one of the many scientists and engineers at the forefront of America's race for space.

One evening, at the Pelican Lounge in Indian Harbour Beach, Keuper complained long and loud about the lack of a higher education alternative for those working at the Cape. He worried that too few of his co-workers held graduate degrees and worried further that this lack would harm the American efforts.

Some time into the conversation, a friend of Keuper's dug into his pockets, pulled out 37 cents and slapped it on the table.

"There's your first donation, Jerry. Now, go build that college." Or so the story goes.

No one knows for sure if the story is more myth than reality, but Florida Tech Professor Gordon Patterson does know when Brevard Engineering College (BEC) went public.

"In June of 1958, Keuper hosted an engineering cotillion at the Trade Winds Hotel in Indialantic," said Patterson. "It was the first fundraiser for the new college. From this funding, Keuper was able to place ads in local newspapers announcing classes that fall. And so a college was born."

During its first three years of existence, the new college had a vagabond lifestyle, with classes moving from location to location. In 1961, Florida Tech moved into its permanent home thanks to a donation of 40 acres from the former University of Melbourne. In fact, 1961 was a pivotal year for a number of reasons, according to Patterson.

"In 1961 BEC landed at its current location and immediately began to build new buildings," said Patterson. "But two other milestones that year went a long way toward establishing the college's legitimacy. First, Reagan DuBose became BEC's first graduate. Second, Eileen Hall was hired to be the college's first librarian."

Indeed, the establishment of the library was to be the cornerstone of the college's successful first decade. It was because of the library, Patterson said, that the college was able to achieve accreditation in 1965, just seven years after its founding and a startling one year after beginning the accreditation process.

Another milestone in 1965 would forever change the role of the institution.

"In 1965 construction was completed on the first dormitory, Brownlie Hall," said Patterson. By 1976, the original residence hall quadrangle—Shaw Hall, Grissom Hall, Campbell Hall, Wood Hall and Evans Hall—would be complete. "This was a seismic shift for the college. In 1958, the average age of a BEC student was 33. With the completion of this dormitory, Keuper and his colleagues were announcing that they were moving BEC into the domain of traditional colleges and universities."

The reasons for this change were both personal and practical, according to Patterson.

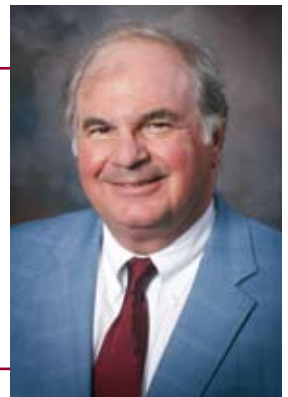

"There were two factors behind the decision to become a residential institution," he said. "First, Keuper and the founders were very much influenced by their own academic experiences. Our quad is homage to the quadrangle at M.I.T., for example. By the mid-60s, people at the Cape were already wondering what would be next after Apollo. Additionally, in going traditional, the leadership were making their own preparations for a future without launches and the race to the moon."

To further cement this shift to a traditional college, Keuper hired former Philadelphia Phillies All-Star Andy Seminick in 1965 to be the college's first athletics director. A year later, BEC had become Florida Institute of Technology.

Fast forward to today, as the university is led by President Anthony J. Catanese. Under Dr. Catanese's leadership, Florida Tech has completed an extremely successful Golden Anniversary Campaign and is in the process of transformational construction increasing the university's physical resources. New facilities include the Scott Center for Autism Treatment, the Harris Center for Science and Engineering, the Ruth Funk Center for Textile Arts, new residence halls, a new dining hall and a new Olympic-sized swimming pool and diving well. Meanwhile, the new Emil Buehler Center for Aviation Training and Research at the Melbourne International Airport guarantees the university's continued leadership in that important field.

Programmatic expansions are a cornerstone of the university's growth. A $5 million grant by the Harris Corporation through the Community Foundation of Brevard is creating the Harris Institute for Assured Information—with an additional $2 million in corporate dollars earmarked for research. The Harris Institute will focus on developing advanced solutions to help solve the global information security problem.

"This university has a longstanding commitment to finding new ways to meet the educational needs of its current and future students," said Erik Joh, trustee and chair of the Development Committee. "These new resources create new opportunities for our students and faculty."

Erik Joh

Alumni of Florida Tech are making a positive impact in their communities and in their world. From astronauts to military generals to business leaders, the distinguished list of graduates continues to grow.

"Florida Tech has enjoyed tremendous success in its first 50 years, but this is only the beginning," Catanese said. "We have grand aspirations for the future, and are gratified for the community support that continues to spark our success. Florida Tech is one more excellent example of the innovative environment that makes Central Florida a very special place in which to live and learn."

*Howard Lance, chairman, president and CEO,
Harris Corporation*

Harris Corporation

This fall, the Harris Center for Science and Engineering opens its doors, heralding a new chapter for both Florida Tech and Harris Corporation. Inside the contemporary three-story, 29,000-square-foot building on Florida Tech's south campus, scientists, engineers and students at the Harris Institute for Assured Information will develop solutions to provide individual and organizational security.

The project was made possible thanks to a $5 million gift from the Harris Corporation Charitable Fund, a donor-advised fund held by the Community Foundation of Brevard. In addition to underwriting construction costs for the center, the donation will also finance a Harris Faculty Chair in Assured Information and provide support to students through scholarships and fellowships. Another $2 million in corporate dollars is earmarked to support research.

Howard L. Lance, Harris chairman, president and chief executive officer, underscored the significance of the project to Florida Tech, Harris and the myriad organizations that will benefit. "Assured communications and information technology are needed for every business, every industry," Lance said. "Banking, finance, health care, power grids, retail organizations and social networks all need to protect their information. The nation's health care reforms depend on digitization of health records while protecting patient privacy. A smarter power grid is not possible without a viable cyberspace, and the same is true for more effective education processes and streamlined government operations.

"Information assurance and cyber security are global issues. We are a digital nation and a digital world, and the entire global economy depends on the availability of our assured information sources," said Lance. "Cyber security must be integrated into our systems in the architecture stage, and Florida Tech is focused on real-world applications that will benefit all segments of our society.

"This center will provide the leadership and tools that help the next generation of engineers and scientists to pursue technical solutions to the great challenges of our time," Lance said. "Equally important, Florida Tech is continuing a long legacy of building an academic foundation with a commitment to excellence."

President and chief executive officer of the Community Foundation of Brevard, Gary F. Lang, praised Harris Corporation for recommending the gift, which came from an endowment established with the foundation more than eight years ago. Calling the CFB a "savings account for other charities," Lang explained that the principal of the original gift from Harris Corporation to CFB remains intact, with the gift coming from investment proceeds.

"Like many other individuals in Brevard County, Harris Corporation chose CFB to help accomplish their goals," Lang said. "We're proud of our relationship with Harris Corporation and the many causes it supports. This initiative will most certainly benefit the entire community for years to come."

Nathan M. Bisk

Nathan M. Bisk, one of the nation's leaders in continuing education and online learning, presented the university with a $5 million gift on Aug. 27. The gift is designed to enhance business offerings and strengthen online education. In appreciation, Florida Tech President Anthony J. Catanese announced that the university would rename its College of Business the Nathan M. Bisk College of Business.

"Mr. Bisk's generosity comes at an extremely opportune time for Florida Tech," said Catanese. "As we conclude our $50 million Golden Anniversary capital campaign, we are looking for new and innovative ways to offer nationally respected business and online learning opportunities. We are deeply thankful for this important gift."

"I am pleased to support Florida Tech and add my name to its outstanding business program," Bisk said. "The university's commitment to a quality educational experience that better prepares students to compete in an ever-changing workplace is very much in keeping with my philosophy of learning. It is my intent to help make the Nathan M. Bisk College of Business one of the nation's premier business colleges, as well as one of the largest."

The $5 million gift will be used to support the College of Business in three primary ways: 1) establishment of an endowed Chair of Business to be named the Max, Edith and Robert Bisk Distinguished Chair of Business; 2) marketing and branding of the college; and 3) growth of the online business programs.

"Mr. Bisk is well-known as a visionary in continuing education and online learning," said T. Dwayne McCay, Florida Tech provost and executive vice president. "His generous support will help provide new resources for our faculty as they continue to deliver outstanding programs."

While most often associated during its 50-year history with excellence in engineering and science programs, Florida Tech is gaining new attention for its business curriculum. Since the online undergraduate degree and MBA degree programs launched in early 2008, enrollment in these business programs has grown to approximately 4,000 students today.

This online increase is in step with the fact that more and more adults are considering online undergraduate and more specialized business master's degrees, according to a recent report by the academic research firm, Eduventures. Also, because most adults are full-time employees, online degree programs have become more popular than ever.

"We're excited that we've expanded our business offerings online to meet the changing needs of students," said College of Business Dean Robert Niebuhr. "With this additional support from Mr. Bisk, we have every expectation that this growth is only the beginning."

Phillip Farmer

*K*nown to lead by example, Golden Anniversary Campaign Chairman Phillip W. Farmer demonstrated his commitment to Florida Tech through a $1.5 million endowment to create the Farmer Scholars Program. The retired chairman, president and chief executive officer of Harris Corp. said the gift was his way of recognizing the importance of the scholarships for deserving students.

The scholarship is modeled after the Angier B. Duke scholarships at Duke University. One of two finalists in eastern North Carolina for the Angier B. Duke scholarship in 1960, Farmer did not win the big prize, but did receive a full tuition and fees consolation scholarship to attend Duke University, which was the boost he needed to begin his storied career. "College would have been impossible without that help. Our family simply did not have the means," he said.

Farmer Scholars receive full tuition and university fees, a meal plan and residence at Harris Village's Farmer Hall, as well as a summer study abroad program at Oxford University between the junior and senior years. The program is open to Florida resident students who graduate in the top five percent of their high school class.

"This program gives us the ability to show off Florida Tech to those high-caliber students who live in the state," said Farmer. "We want to help keep our brightest students here—it's great for the state and our community."

Already, that wish is coming true. In the inaugural year, a limited number of students were invited to apply for the scholarship and the response was overwhelming. More than 180 students, many with a GPA of 4.0 or higher, submitted applications. As word of the scholarship has spread, Florida Tech is now on the radar screen for hundreds of high school guidance counselors in the state of Florida.

Because the curriculum is so focused when pursuing a technical degree, particularly engineering, Farmer asked that the program be designed to allow the recipient to travel to Oxford University to study for one summer. "When you get a technical education, there's a broadening needed. A summer spent at Oxford does just that," he said.

Each year, a new Farmer Scholar will be named. "I look forward, four years from now, to a time when we have a scholarship recipient in every class," Farmer said. "We're going to be attracting some great students to the university."

Emil Buehler Perpetual Trust

The Emil Buehler Perpetual Trust in Paramus, N.J., generously provided Florida Institute of Technology with $1.5 million to fund a new operations center for the College of Aeronautics to run its training facility. The Buehler Trust was established in 1984 in memory of Emil Buehler and his commitment to aviation science and technology.

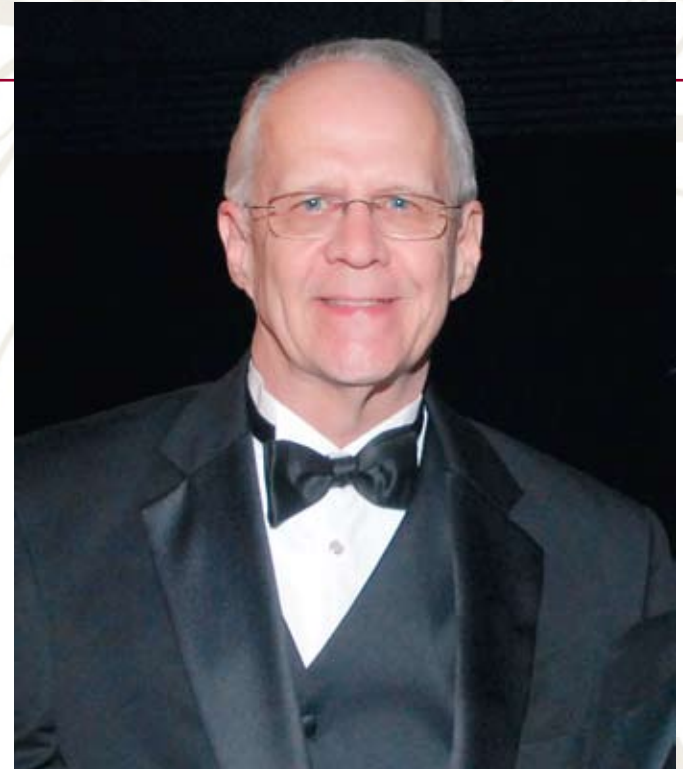

Emil Buehler, a visionary in aviation, engineering and architecture, emigrated from his native Germany following WWI to pursue his career. He operated his own school of aeronautics at New Jersey's Teterboro Airport, ran a seaplane base on the Hudson River and designed and built an aviation facility at the Executive Airport in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., in 1964.

At Melbourne International Airport, the Emil Buehler Center for Aviation Training and Research is 12,240 square feet and includes a simulator room, multipurpose/training room, lobby with displays to showcase Florida Tech's aviation achievements, student lounge with airfield viewing, instructors lounge, conference and briefing rooms, weather/flight planning room and general operation offices.

The hanger is 17,600 square feet. The apron includes parking for 44 aircraft; there are 156 car parking spaces nearby.

Dedication of the building and hanger was on Feb. 20. Trustee George Weaver represented the Emil Buehler Perpetual Trust at the event. "This project is a great example of the future of general aviation," commented Weaver.

Thanks to Emil Buehler and his Trust, future pilots, airport managers and aviation meteorologists will benefit from the new state-of-the-art facility that is now a part of Florida Tech's College of Aeronautics. The center will prepare future generations in the field of aviation for many years to come.

Reece, Ed and Cheryl Scott in the president's garden in Monrovia, Liberia, 2008.

Ed Scott

Ed Scott made a commitment to Florida Tech when he became a trustee in 2004. A year later he substantiated that commitment by supporting the university in its mission to treat those affected by autism, helping them to become as skilled and self-reliant as possible.

Scott and his wife, Cheryl, provided the initial funding for the Scott Center for Autism Treatment, opening this fall. The center provides services for individuals with autism spectrum disorders, training for parents, teachers and other professionals, and research on effective treatments for autism.

An issue of grave concern, autism affects one in 150 children born in the United States, according to the Centers for Disease Control.

Scott recalls when his son, Reece, now 21, was diagnosed with autism at age four. There were few resources then to help them or their son who was since re-diagnosed as having a mild form of Asperger's Syndrome. Reece has just completed his sophomore year at Georgetown University as a Japanese language major. He is about to leave for a year of study in Japan at Nanzan University in Nagoya.

Scott saw a need he could help meet and a university that he thought was already heading in the right direction.

"While many universities and institutes were looking at the causes of autism, there was little happening in the area of researching the best treatments," said Scott. "I met with Mary Beth Kenkel (dean of the College of Psychology and Liberal Arts) and was convinced that Florida Tech had some interesting programmatic ideas on how to help these children and their families.

"Those with autism can acquire many life skills to make them self-sufficient. If they don't, they have to stay with their parents until their parents are gone. Ultimately, this presents a very difficult dilemma for those affected, for their relatives and for society at large."

Scott divides his time between the Space Coast and Washington, D.C., in his role as founder and chairman of three philanthropic organizations dedicated to addressing world poverty: The Center for Global Development, Friends of the Global Fight and The Center for Interfaith Action on Global Poverty (CIFA).

Ruth Funk

Ruth Funk is a woman with a passion and a dream. For years she has collected textiles from around the world and also hand-crafted one-of-a-kind coats that have become her signature art. She was looking for a place to house her expansive collection of clothes, textiles and related items and Florida Institute of Technology provided the perfect opportunity to make her dream a reality.

Over the past few years, she has fueled her dream with funds to build a new center on campus between Evans Library and the Botanical Garden, the Ruth Funk Center for Textile Arts. It is the only such facility in Florida. Completion of the center was in June with a grand opening for the community held in August.

“There are many cultures in the great tapestry of life—I work to share my knowledge of world textiles and their creators,” explained Funk.

The center houses Funk’s textile collection along with other donated traditional hand-made textiles, embroidery, garments and related accessories from Africa, Central Asia, China, India, Japan, Central and South America, spanning the early-19th to mid-20th centuries. Themed exhibits will be unveiled several times a year with lectures and programs fashioned around the theme.

Programming for textiles at Florida Tech for the past few years has featured exhibitions and experts on Kimono: Transition to Modernity, Patterns of Life: Kuba Cloth and Design, Art of Fashion and Traditional Textiles of India.

“I have always wanted a place to preserve rare textiles, exhibit world textiles, teach textile arts and expose people to the value of cultures and cloth,” said Funk.

Funk has enriched the university through her vision and philanthropy. She has given Florida Tech hundreds of books, a lifelong collection of international textiles and wearable art for future generations to admire and share.

*Tom Vice, sector vice president and general manager,
Northrop Grumman*

Northrop Grumman

Global security leader Northrop Grumman exemplifies the importance of Florida Tech's corporate partnerships. Earlier this year, Northrop Grumman underscored its commitment to Florida Tech through the creation of a $1 million endowment to support the university's engineering and science student designers.

The relationship between Florida Tech and Northrop Grumman goes back for decades. Several Northrop Grumman leaders serve as mentors and advisers to students in the College of Engineering, and numerous Florida Tech alumni have joined the Northrop Grumman worldwide team, now more than 120,000 strong.

"This endowment comes at a critical time for our nation," said Tom Vice, sector vice president and general manager, Northrop Grumman Aerospace Systems Battle Management and Engagement Systems Division. "For decades, Northrop Grumman has been investing in getting young people interested in science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) programs. To succeed as a company, and as a country, we need to ensure our young people are given hands-on learning opportunities."

The decision to support Florida Tech's undergraduate engineering and science students was a natural one, Vice said. For more than 40 years, Florida Tech graduating seniors have been required to design and build original projects, including robots, rockets, steel bridges, alternate energy-generating devices and satellites. "Employers who hire Florida Tech graduates have commented that they need less training because they have a clearer understanding of what it takes to build and complete a project," said Thomas Waite, dean of the College of Engineering at Florida Tech.

Each year, the students compete in the newly named Northrop Grumman Engineering and Science Student Design Showcase, vying to take top honors in their field or to win the coveted Northrop Grumman prize. This year, members of FITSAT 5, the first team to win the Northrop Grumman prize, joined Vice for lunch on the Northrop Grumman campus.

"Meeting these talented students made us all realize the value of our investment in Florida Tech," Vice said. "Clearly, they had already learned so much about how to have a successful project. The students were mindful of scheduling, procurement and budgeting, as well as design and assembly. These traits will serve them well as their careers progress and we would welcome their talent and enthusiasm as members of the Northrop Grumman team."

Jack and Martha Hartley

From their first gift in 1987 to the present day, Jack and Martha Hartley have been faithful supporters of Florida Tech. Their generosity is evident on campus, where many events take place in the Hartley Room each day and many students earn a top-notch education with the financial assistance of the John Thomas and Martha Hartley Scholarship.

Jack Hartley joined the Florida Tech board of trustees in 1987 and served as its chairman from 1997 to 2003, during the time period when the successful award of the F.W. Olin Foundation grant changed every aspect of Florida Tech life.

A major element of the Olin grant was its gift-matching program to build an endowment. The couple made the first matching gift of $1 million, providing an endowment of $2 million to support scholarships for deserving students.

“I felt the investment of dollars in Florida Tech would have a greater impact here than contributions to my alma mater, Auburn University. Contributing to Florida Tech was the best thing I and others could do to help achieve Florida Tech’s challenging goals,” Jack Hartley said.

The Hartleys rose to the occasion again as part of the Golden Anniversary Campaign—donating $1 million for construction of Hartley Hall, one of three residence halls in the Harris Village complex.

They were also first to fund a unique new planned giving vehicle, a charitable lead trust. This arrangement allows Florida Tech to receive annual payments over time totaling $1 million. During the payout period, the trust has the possibility of growing through both capital appreciation and compound interest. At the end of the payout period, any remaining amount after the $1 million has been paid to Florida Tech is paid to named beneficiaries, in this case the Hartley’s children.

“The charitable lead trust was an attractive gift vehicle, having not only tax advantages but, with good investment management, the potential for financial benefit to my kids,” said Hartley.

Overall, Hartley feels the Golden Anniversary Campaign has been instrumental in ensuring the continued success of Florida Tech as a major contributor to technical education in our nation.

“Technical education is key to the future of this country,” said Hartley. “One reason I’ve been such a strong supporter of Florida Tech is that I believe the future competitive position of our nation depends on advancements in science and technology. Florida Tech has an important role to play in providing that education.”

Allen S. Henry

Allen S. Henry, Ph.D., joined the Florida Tech Board of Trustees in 2000 and has been a sustaining supporter ever since. He has funded both student scholarships and an engineering professorship in addition to quietly contributing to many of the university's activities.

The Allen S. Henry Professor of Engineering endowment funds a faculty chair in the College of Engineering, while the Dr. Allen S. Henry Endowment for Student Financial Aid funds scholarships for outstanding students who demonstrate financial need due to unplanned or unintended difficulties.

For his great generosity, Henry was honored as the namesake of the university's advancement building, the Allen S. Henry Building.

"My support for the university is based on my belief that the engineering and science education offered at Florida Tech is very valuable to our community, state and nation," he said.

Henry initiated his undergraduate scholarship fund with a $500,000 gift during the Golden Anniversary Campaign.

"Scholarships are at the heart of making the resources available to students who are qualified," said Henry.

"My gifts of a professorship and scholarships are to support the most important aspects of a technical university—a research-oriented faculty and great students."

A solid scholarship base and a healthy faculty endowment are defining components of a world-class research university. And thanks to donors like Henry, Florida Tech is achieving that distinction.

Marilyn Link and the Link Foundation

Trustee Emerita Marilyn C. Link's tradition and that of the Link Foundation of giving to Florida Tech began in 1969 with the Foundation's $1,000 grant to the aeronautics program. Many grants and gifts followed from the Link family and some of their friends like Erik Joh and Andrew Clark who also are now Florida Tech trustees.

The Link Foundation was established in 1953 by Marilyn's brother, Edwin A. Link (1904–1981) and his wife Marion Clayton Link (1907–1995). Edwin Link is best known for his invention of the first successful flight simulator. In his second career, he designed and developed tools for oceanographic research. It is no surprise, then, that the Link Foundation is dedicated to the advancement of simulation, ocean engineering and instrumentation, energy research and conservation.

Many of the university's research and teaching programs relate to these fields, such as the Link Scholar Endowment, which funds a student every year in the department of marine and environmental systems (DMES). Also, George Maul, DMES department head, administers the national Link Foundation Fellowship in Ocean Engineering and Instrumentation. Established in 1998, the program funds two or three fellows from universities nationwide.

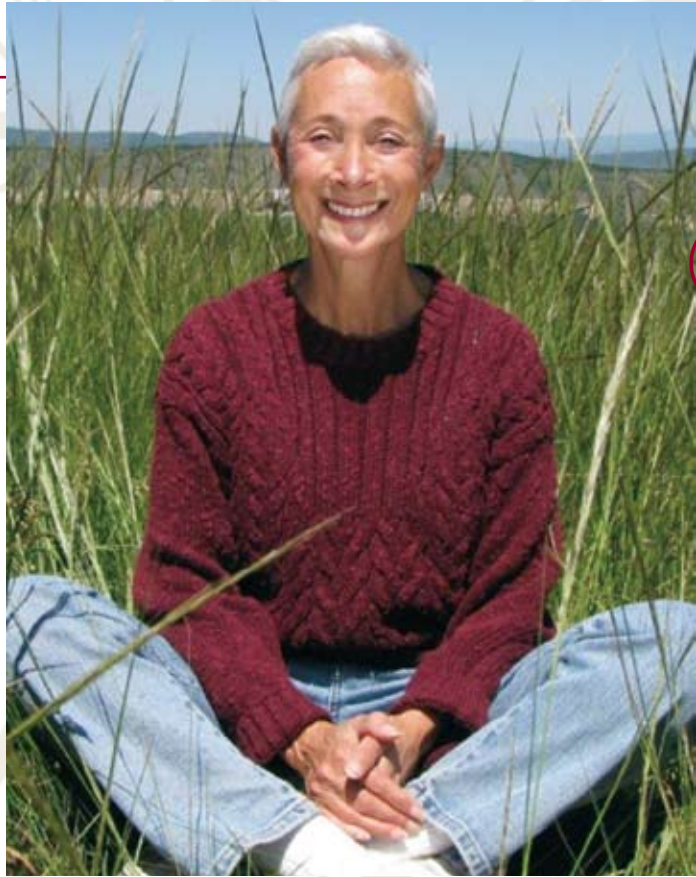

Marilyn also helped her family establish the Edwin A. Link Special Collection Endowment and Library Information Network (LINK) under the direction of Evans Library Dean Celine Alvey Lang. Digitizing the collection of historical records continues today.

Marilyn established the first Florida Tech gift annuity in 2007. She called it "one of the best investments I have made over the last five years and a win-win because it will eventually benefit students and the university." She has also left a bequest in her will.

She gives, she said, because she has known many of the university students, faculty and all three presidents and believes that all of her gifts have been well managed.

"In my book every dollar given to the university—for students, programs and research—has been well spent," said Link.

Juanita Brooks

Juanita Brooks '82 Psy.D., WFIT and Florida Tech go back many years. Brooks began listening to the 40-year-old radio station back in the late 70s, when she was a student at the university. She continued to be a fan as the station evolved, when it offered smooth jazz through the 80s and 90s and became a National Public Radio affiliate in 1995.

Appreciating its outside-the-mainstream appeal, Brooks decided to give to WFIT to strengthen its programming. Her gift underwrites Democracy Now, a Pacifica news program hosted by Amy Goodman.

"I was very pleased to see that Democracy Now was available," said Brooks. "It's a program that meets my need to learn more about what's going on in the world."

And Brooks, a Melbourne Beach resident, is seeing more of the world since she retired in 2006. She said she especially enjoys conversing with international guests at her Melbourne Beach house vacation rental and has been doing a bit of traveling. In fact, the interview for this story was conducted by phone at her other home, a ranch near Steamboat Springs, Colo.

Before she retired, though, she made good use of her advanced education in her full-time independent psychology practice. Simultaneously she was an adjunct professor of graduate classes at Nova Southeastern University and coordinated that university's master's degree in counseling program in Melbourne.

Making donations to Florida Tech throughout the years, she gave much thought to this legacy gift to WFIT, which will continue to benefit the station after she is no longer here to listen.

"When I'm gone, even if Democracy Now is no longer available, my gift ensures that a similar news program will continue to be funded at WFIT. I see it as a very positive contribution to the community."

Brooks also still supports the School of Psychology and is especially proud of the new Scott Center for Autism Treatment.

"It's a great addition, not only for the university but for the whole field of autism," she said. "This university is on the cutting edge of this evolving discipline."

F. Alan Smith

Bringing to Florida Tech 30-plus years of executive experience, former General Motors Chief Financial Officer F. Alan Smith was a very welcome addition to the Florida Tech board of trustees in 1997. Through the years, he has continued as the board's audit committee chair and has found innovative ways to leverage his expertise. He has enriched the College of Business and the Florida Tech Fund, in particular.

Earning bachelor's and master's degrees from Dartmouth College, Smith was inspired by that institution's Tuck School of Business' visiting executive program.

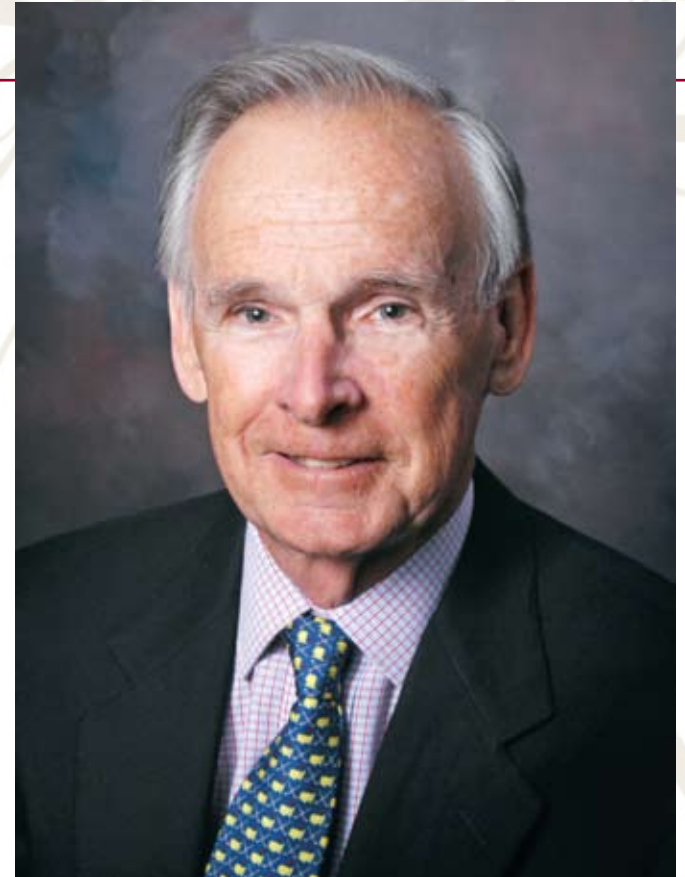

"When I was a student there, they brought in an alumnus—a top executive at a leading life insurance company, who showed me the real world of business. That was very meaningful," said Smith, who later returned to Tuck to speak in the program himself.

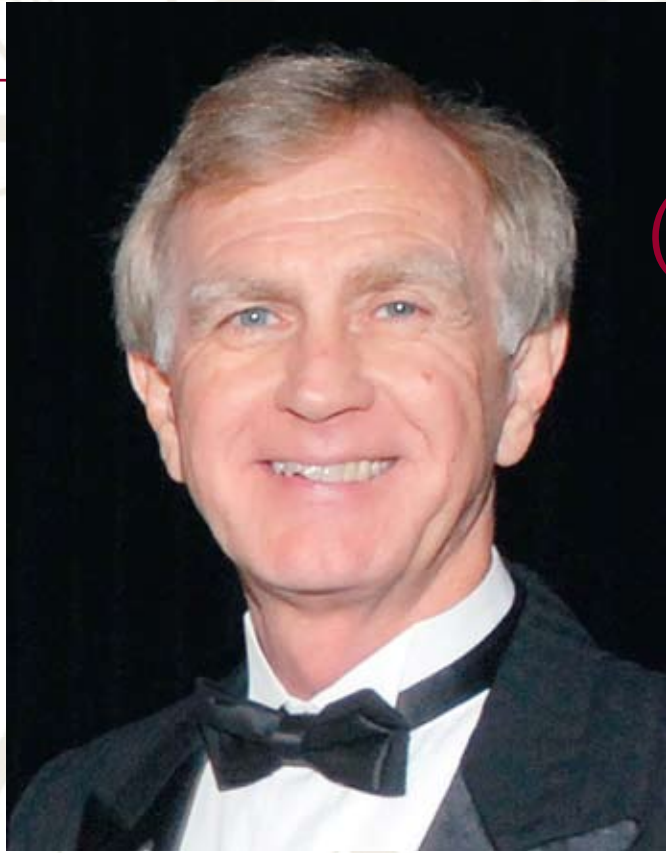

Smith's gift to the Florida Tech College of Business in 2007 replicates that experience through the F. Alan Smith Visiting Executive Program Fund. The program brought to campus Smith as the first speaker, followed by Al Neuharth, founder of USA Today and, in 2009, Debbie Harvey, Ron Jon Surf Shop president and chief executive officer.

"Tuck's program now hosts 75 visiting executives a year. It will take us a little time to work up to that here," said Smith, "but we can work toward it."

Smith has also given generously to the Florida Tech Fund, which helps the university meet a variety of needs, and the annual Sporting Affair fundraiser for athletic scholarships.

"Much as I care for Dartmouth, it is an older established university, and it is not as easy to see how one makes an impact there," said Smith. "At Florida Tech it's very obvious how our vision led by President Catanese is being realized. Here I feel part of the excellent strides the university is making, and because of that, it's a pleasure to think I can help make a difference."

Dale Dettmer

*M*elbourne attorney Dale Dettmer received a master's degree in electrical engineering from Florida Tech in 1971. He went on to get his Juris Doctorate degree from the University of Florida in 1973. He is a partner in the law firm of Krasny and Dettmer. He has served on Florida Tech's board of trustees for the past 10 years and before that served on the Alumni Association board of directors for six years. He currently serves as chairman of the Florida Tech board of trustees.

Dettmer and his wife, Pamela, established the Dettmer Family Scholarship Fund in 1999 and have been adding to the endowment regularly. During the Golden Anniversary Campaign for Florida Tech, the Dettmers contributed an additional $200,000 to that fund which provides annual scholarships to students attending the university. This gift more than tripled the value of the fund and the scholarships available to deserving students.

Dettmer stated, "We are pleased to give something back to the community in a way that helps deserving students attend Florida Tech when they otherwise may be unable to do so."

Dettmer's practice is focused on tax issues involving estate planning, business law and real estate matters. He has spearheaded the planned giving program for the past three years as chairman of the Development Committee of the board of trustees, which encourages alumni and friends of Florida Tech to consider planned gifts including pledges, bequests, charitable gift annuities and charitable remainder trusts.

Realizing Dreams

Whether giving burgers and fries to a hungry athlete or donating technical manuals to the Evans Library, in-kind gifts enhance a student's experience at Florida Tech.

When Rasvan Rusovici, assistant professor of mechanical and aerospace engineering, learned that the father of one of his students wanted to gift his personal aircraft, or "Dream Machine," to the university, he was ecstatic.

"I'm not presented with an aircraft every day," Rusovici said. "This was definitely a welcomed surprise."

The "Dream Machine" is a two-seat powered parachute built in 2001. The aircraft travels at a maximum speed of 34 mph and can fly at an altitude of up to 10,000 feet. The donation was valued at $12,500.

"We will use the 'Dream Machine' to teach aerospace engineering students the fundamentals of flight, aerodynamics, aircraft and stability and control concepts," said Rusovici. "Students can use it as a platform for their junior and senior design experiments," he said.

In another example of an in-kind gift, Los Angeles-based artist Albert Contreras decided it was time to begin donating pieces of his work to those who might enjoy them. Contreras said when he made this decision he thought of Florida Tech.

"A dear friend was a graduate of the university and spoke very highly of it," Contreras said. "When I decided that it was time to donate some of my pieces to society I wrote a letter to President Catanese asking if he would accept a few of my paintings."

"Composition 3" consists of six 20 by 24 inch paintings of acrylic on canvas; the total value of the paintings equaled $30,000. Because the paintings look best in a grouping, the university has chosen to display them in the second floor reception area of the new Scott Center for Autism Treatment.

Large or small, in-kind gifts contribute greatly to the wealth of the university.

"Make no little plans. They have no magic to stir men's blood and probably will not themselves be realized. Make big plans, aim high in hope and work, remembering that a noble, logical diagram once recorded will never die, but long after we are gone will be a living thing, asserting itself with ever growing insistency."

Daniel Burnham, American Architect and Urban Planner
