The Torktainer is the Future of the Body Building Industry

Since the launch of the Torktainer in 2001 it has been an overwhelming success, more than doubling its sales growth each year!

- Body builders realise there is a very low tooling cost.
- An ordinary 3/8" - 1/2" impact wrench & star drive will do the job
- It has the benefits of a controlled clamp for the new lightweight and standard GRP panels.
- It is re-usable and replaceable
- A panel can be easily changed in minutes rather than hours!
- This obviously will greatly reduce your labour costs as well as your piece part costs.

Editor's comment

Introduction

Welcome to the 25th edition of Freight Industry Yearbook. How the industry has changed since that first edition in 1982! One aspect that has not changed, however, is the dominance of road transport in the UK freight industry, despite rising operational costs and increasing congestion. Rail freight is, however, gaining ground and air cargo has increased by 40 per cent since 1995, according to Government statistics. In the meantime, sea freight has naturally remained the dominant mode for international trade.

What has become increasingly apparent, however, and is likely to dominate the next 25 years, is that the industry cannot continue to take its fuel for granted, given the international issues concerning oil supply and pricing, not to mention the long-term environmental effects of CO₂ emissions from those fuels. Always evolving to match its customers' needs, in whatever form, the industry will continue to provide an essential element of UK trade, both at home and abroad. We look forward to providing an annual insight into developments for another 25 years.

TRANSPORT – FACING UP TO THE CHALLENGES OF THE 21ST CENTURY

Colin Beaumont,
*Director General,
British International
Freight Association*

Today we are constantly reminded, from all sides, of the critical role that transport plays in the economic wealth of nations. Transport has played a key role in facilitating globalisation and its cost has become a key factor in the price of goods in the high street and beyond. Transport is cheap, some may say too cheap, but this factor has added to the general wealth of society and created new opportunities for business that would have been inconceivable a couple of decades ago.

However, this achievement has not been without a price. Transport may have contributed to the nation's wealth, but it is also having a measurable impact on our environment. Facing up to the impact that emissions from aircraft, ships and lorries are having has become necessary. Transport journeys can be calculated in terms of the carbon footprint they leave but, of course, this is only part of the story. Indeed, the entire supply chain is now under greater scrutiny than ever before.

Many supply chains, all around the world, are stretched, and components for certain products frequently accumulate tens of thousands of miles before they reach the final consumer. Whether this is sustainable in the longer term is a matter of concern and debate. It certainly presents a challenge to transport operators, who will doubtless have to become far more aware of their environmental responsibilities.

I believe we will experience a growing concern and focus on solving some of these issues in 2007, and much of this will be customer driven. Bringing about change will rely heavily on the partnership between the cargo owner and the transport provider because each will need to bring their own commitment to the party.

Paying the price of security

Security within supply chains has been the subject of a great deal of political focus in recent years and, for Europe at least, the function of securing them has yet to be resolved in an acceptable way. Acceptable, that is, from the point of view of cost to industry and the facilitation of trade.

Understandably, the United States has lead the way in this process, but what has been put in place is far from satisfactory. I do not believe that the US has been able to count the cost as yet, and much of this has been imposed on those countries that export to America.

When other countries impose their conditions on US exporters, there may well be a reaction. Having a secure supply chain at minimal cost and with little disruption to trade appears difficult to achieve within the same strategy, thus posing yet another challenge for industry and the politicians.

Some products accumulate tens of thousands of miles before they reach the final consumer

The customer is more concerned about protecting his cargo from criminals than terrorism Photograph: Volga-Dnepr's new generation IL-76TD-90VD freighter aircraft in Detroit

Protecting the cargo from the terrorist is only one aspect of security. The customer is, legitimately, far more concerned about protection for his cargo from would-be criminals. This can represent a far more expensive price tag and raises another issue that must be tackled by the partners in the supply chain, working together rather than in isolation.

Globalisation does not only facilitate legitimate activity. Criminals have also become more sophisticated and successful, taking advantage of the increasing amount of unprotected cargo in transit.

Tackling congestion

Arguably the top priority for transport in all modes is the threat that arises from congestion. This is not just a UK problem, but in our small island, with such a significant concentration of population around the metropolitan areas and the key transport gateways, it is very difficult to solve.

Solving it, however, is a must and the industry needs to continue to pressure government to make the necessary investment. There are many strands to this increasingly serious issue: Planning laws, infrastructure development, technological opportunity, environmental considerations and innovative thinking all need to be taken account of as part of a complex equation.

Above all else, freight transport is a 'people business'. Without good people we shall fail to meet our expectations. Attending to skills shortages in all areas of the industry is yet another priority, one that has to be the responsibility of the industry itself. Government funding does exist for training, but it is not always targeted where it is needed and restrictions are often imposed that limit its application where it is available.

In short, freight transport is an indispensable component of society. It is often taken for granted, unfairly taxed and ignored in favour of high profile services like health and education, services which carry essential votes, which keep our politicians in power, or not as the case may be. The challenge for freight transport is to raise itself further up the political agenda, ensuring that it continues to serve the needs of the nation in an efficient, cost-effective manner.

INNOVATIVE TRAILERS WITH MAXIMUM LOAD SECURITY

Load-securing systems from Krone

Krone, with its three independent business areas, is one of the most successful companies in the German state of Lower Saxony. A constant eye on the market, expertise, flexibility and innovation are the criteria which characterise Krone and today have made the company from the Emsland region unique in the fields of agricultural machines and commercial trailers. At its highly modern manufacturing plant Krone produces high-quality vehicles which are unmatched in Europe. The centrepiece of the plant is the E-Coat paint system (a cathode electrophoretic enamelling process followed by a powder coating), probably the best process available for real long-term protection against rust and stone strikes.

The secret to Krone's success has to be a constant process of innovation, which is immediately applied to series production. In this way, the company can produce high quality vehicles, in large numbers, at competitive prices. The latest examples come from the Krone Liner series, with the multi-featured Profi Liner, the refrigerated Cool Liner trailer, the Mega Liner, the Dry Liner and also the new Box Liner concept.

Safety performance

Krone also demonstrates superb performance in the area of vehicle safety; a couple of years ago, the company revealed its new Multilock/Multiblock

System. The multilock side rave can be used in combination with the multiblock load-securing system, for a genuinely versatile and multi-featured transport system.

Multi Fix is a new, innovative, load-securing system developed by Krone especially for the transportation of crude metals. Multi Fix offers the highest possible safety when transporting raw metal tubing, pipes, bars, and/or sheets. The system also facilitates quicker loading, securing, and unloading of such freight items. Time-consuming auxiliary strapping, as required previously, is now redundant. Components of the new system which are available immediately, include Multi Fix support beams, Multi Fix sockets, Multi Fix bracing beams, Multi Fix bracing tubes, and newly designed retaining nets for load securing in travel and reverse directions.

'TELL US WHO YOU ARE'

Geoff Dossetter,
*External Affairs Director,
Freight Transport Association*

Five or six years ago, the trade carried by lorry between the UK and Europe was split roughly fifty-fifty – half of it carried on UK vehicles and the other half by foreign vehicles. That is no longer the case.

Around one in seven of the heaviest vehicles on UK roads is now from overseas. Whilst this is an indicator of healthy UK trade with Europe and beyond, there is no doubt that foreign lorries are causing competitive problems and, sadly, it seems road safety problems as well.

In recent years the amount of trade has increased substantially and now, although conducting a similar number of journeys as they were six years ago, UK international hauliers are carrying out only 25 per cent of the work. A massive 75 per cent is now in the hands of European transport companies, with an increasing number now coming from the eastern European countries which joined the EU in May 2005.

This means that something in the order of seven out of every ten of the heaviest vehicles on UK roads, those of 38 tonnes and above, are vehicles which operate out of a home base somewhere in Europe or beyond.

These vehicles come to the UK with a considerable commercial operating advantage over our home-based fleet. We all know that the cost of fuel – diesel and petrol – increased dramatically during 2005 and 2006. That increase clearly impacted on all countries and therefore all vehicle operators. But we are at an enormous disadvantage in the UK – our Government imposes a duty on diesel of 47p per litre. For the rest of Europe, the average is just 22p per litre.

Labour rates in Europe, particularly in Eastern Europe, are lower than the UK – another ingredient in lower operating costs for the vehicle.

And now there is increasing evidence of yet another means of cost-cutting by foreign vehicles in the UK, this time rather more sinister. There is increasing evidence that foreign vehicles working in the UK are more likely to be overloaded, more likely to be in breach of drivers' hours rules, and more likely to be in a non-roadworthy condition. I will come back to these matters.

The combination of these factors means that the lower operating costs applying to foreign lorries working in the UK has a negative impact on the commercial operation of the UK home-based industry conducting UK-based haulage.

75 per cent of heavy vehicles transporting goods between the UK and Europe is now in the hands of non-UK transport companies

LIVE VEHICLE TRACKING SYSTEMS

Vehicle tracking system

Vehicle tracking is becoming more and more popular, and what telematics company TransTech Europe Ltd have found is that once somebody has a system in their vehicles, they wonder how they managed without one in the past!

It's very much like the early days before everyone had computers in their office or before the advent of the mobile phone.

So when your vehicle leaves your premises or a van starts from the driver's home address, you need to ask yourself the following questions:

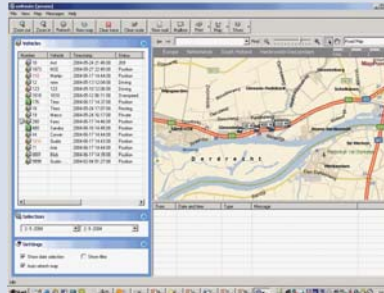

- Do I know what time they started work?
- Were they really stuck in traffic, so they couldn't get back for another load?
- Did they really finish at that time so they are entitled to more overtime?

- Was the best route taken for time and fuel efficiency?
- If the vehicle breaks down, can we find it very quickly to assist the driver and load?
- If a customer wants to know where your vehicle is, can you tell them?

If you can't answer these questions with a definite answer then a live tracking system is for you, and you would get your investment on the product back very quickly!

A live tracking system costs a lot less than a computer and can carry similar costs to some mobile telephones but cost less to run every month!

Example of a live tracking system

So whether it is a truck, trailer – or anything that moves – we can track it for you!

Driver time sheets

Driver time sheets can take up a lot of time. Usually the driver hands in his/her time sheet, somebody then enters the hours into your own system and this all has to be checked. This can take a lot of time! You could stop a lot of duplication and time by doing all this once!

If the driver types his jobs in electronically and the driving times, distance, resting, waiting is recorded, then, at the end of the week, the information just needs to be exported onto your own system and the records are all complete.

Every haulier has different methods of payment and works differently regarding bonuses; we can make alterations to fit around your business instead of you having to work around our system.

Think of the time and effort that your company has to put into this side of your operation. If it's a lot, then it is worth thinking about doing electronically, connected to a live tracking system to see what payback you would get on your investment in the equipment!

Transtech Europe Ltd has over 10 years of Telematics experience based in Leicestershire and supports the UK. We are the UK dealer for the ICS Blackbox system/Punch Telematics.

You can start from basic Data Loggers, Satellite Tracking, to electronic worksheets registering driver's daily tasks with the option of Lone Working Security and Driver Security. This is offered to both small and large fleets. Data is downloaded for the most accurate real time location and reporting and two way messaging can also be used enabling the office to send the work/job requirements to the driver.

Some of the reports include:

- Electronic logbook with start, stop and rest times.
 - Location, speed and journey details.
 - Daily journey summary
- Panic alarm mapping for driver security and lone worker.
 - Nearest vehicle to do a specific task.

The system can be purchased or leased to own.

The Freight Transport Association is calling for a registration system for foreign vehicles entering the UK

Foreign lorries carry out legitimate cabotage (i.e. the carriage of goods by a foreign vehicle not based in the country where the work is being carried out). Worse still, foreign lorries carry out illegitimate cabotage – not temporary spot work, but regular contract work.

The presence of these operators and the lower rates which they are able to work at has a downward impact on the rates which UK industry can offer in a competitive market place. And even if they do not compete for the same work, their existence in the market place is bad news for the home industry. The UK industry has strongly objected to this situation and called for UK Government help to level the playing field, but so far without success.

The commercial issue is clearly serious for those involved. But perhaps more serious is the road safety issue I mentioned above.

There is increasing evidence of poor vehicle condition and breach of drivers' hours safety rules by foreign vehicles and drivers.

In the UK, the enforcement agencies – the police and the Vehicle Operator Services Agency (VOSA) – carefully target their resources at roadside checks aimed at stopping those vehicles they consider to be in breach of regulations. After all, what is the point of stopping a safe and sound, well-operated and maintained vehicle from a reputable company unlikely to be breaking rules. The concentration is on identifying and stopping vehicles more likely to be offending.

They do this by use of ANPR – Automatic Number Plate Recognition. A moving vehicle is identified by a camera inspecting its number plate and, within seconds, the details and record of that vehicle are available on a computer screen operated by the roadside check. Details of ownership, last HGV annual test, any previous breaches, etc. On the basis of that record and the experience of the roadside crew, decisions are made whether to stop the vehicle. This is intelligent targeting, aimed at catching the bad guys and improving overall safety.

But what if the vehicle is not registered in the UK? It is all very well examining the records from DVLA, VOSA and elsewhere for UK vehicles. But where are the records for foreign vehicles?

Not available.

Clearly this information exists. But, currently, it is held on the database of the country of origin. And that data is not shared, as it ought to be, on a pan-European basis.

That means that the enforcement agencies are flying blind. They are obliged to operate only on their eyesight and instinct.

In a recent exercise on the M20 at Ashford, Kent, close to Dover, VOSA inspectors stopped over 60 foreign lorries. They found that a third of them were in breach of drivers' hours rules – perhaps the drivers had been working long over the legal limit, and two-thirds had roadworthiness problems with brakes, tyres, steering, visibility etc. Two-thirds!

The Freight Transport Association has called for a system of 'Tell us who you are'. FTA thinks that foreign vehicles entering the UK should register details of their ownership, last test, any record of breaches or prohibitions, destination, dwell-time etc.. In that way, we would have some clue as to who these people are and where they come from to help our enforcement process.

Sadly, anecdotal evidence suggests that foreign lorries on UK roads are involved in a disproportionately high number of accidents. This is perhaps consequential not only to them being a left-hand drive vehicle operating in a right-hand drive environment, but also to poor or unsatisfactory maintenance standards. It has to stop – both for commercial and safety reasons.

'Tell us who you are' is not an unreasonable request, from which the legitimate visitor has nothing to fear. The dodgy operator should be a bit more concerned.

FAIRER SYSTEMS FOR UK ROAD HAULAGE

Roger King,
Chief Executive,
Road Haulage Association

Haulage is a tough business to be in in 2007. Not only does road transport in the UK as a whole have the highest rate of fuel duty in Europe, but it also has the most congested highways. This means that, with rising fuel prices worldwide and unpredictable journey times, hauliers already tread an operational tightrope. Add to that the barrage of European legislation directed at hauliers and it is no wonder that many operators are struggling. As fast as they can assimilate one new requirement, another follows – from drivers' hours and digital tachographs to their choice of fuel.

Fuel is the number one issue for the haulage industry. As a basic raw material, it represents anything up to a third of a firm's operating costs. The international situation affecting oil prices worldwide remains extremely volatile and it is very difficult for the industry to cope with such widely (and wildly) fluctuating prices. Though this is causing considerable headaches, most hauliers now have clauses in place in their customers' contracts to deal with the fluctuations in fuel cost. These often state that variations above or below a two or three pence per litre buffer zone will be recovered from the customer (or reimbursed in the case of a price reduction).

In addition to the high basic cost of fuel, the UK has to contend with a high rate of fuel duty in comparison with its European neighbours. The Road Haulage Association was extremely disappointed by the Chancellor's decision in his pre-Budget statement in December 2006 to end the Government's three-year freeze on fuel duty, although when applied, the blow of the 1.25 pence rise was in fact partly absorbed by a fall in the basic price. While it was labelled a 'green tax', hauliers are essential users of the road and already operate trucks that are 60 per cent cleaner and greener than they were six years ago at the time of the first duty freeze.

March 2007 Budget

The increase in fuel duty announced in Chancellor Gordon Brown's March 2007 budget puts British hauliers at risk. The Road Haulage Association is asking the Chancellor to take action to rebate road hauliers before the above-inflation, two pence per litre increase in diesel duty takes effect on October 1st. The UK already has the highest fuel duty in Europe and competition from Continental firms able to buy cheap diesel is undermining UK haulage and costing jobs – this will widen the gap even further.

Lumping cars and lorries together is no longer an adequate solution to fuel duty. British motorists do not compete with drivers from abroad – British hauliers do. Hauliers must use the six-month delay to prepare for TWO rate increases; one in October and another next spring when diesel duty goes up by another (above-inflation) two pence per litre.

On the other hand, the Association welcomes the holding of vehicle excise duty for lorries announced in the Budget and the introduction of a reduced pollution certificate for Euro 5 trucks will be also welcomed by many hauliers. However, it is regrettable that this announcement has been delayed for a year. The implementation in October will create resentment among operators who have bought Euro 4 trucks in the past few months; and we anticipate wholesale cancellations of trucks built to Euro 4 but not yet delivered to customers. The RHA will be pressing the government urgently to give grants for the upgrading of Euro 4 trucks to Euro 5.

Staged increases in capital gains tax for firms with a turnover of less than £2.5 to 20 per cent now and 22 per cent in two years' time and the intention to re-direct the increase in tax revenue into greater incentives for investment were announced. However the RHA felt that small hauliers might prefer to make their own decision on what to do with profit and it is inconsistent to reduce tax rates for larger firms but not for smaller companies.

The RHA is also concerned that the increase from £160 to £195 in the aggregates levy will put further strain on the road building programme.

The European Commission recently announced its intention to cut CO₂ emissions through amendments to its directive on fuel quality, making companies use greener fuels containing five per cent additives from renewable sources. This proposal is something which is viewed with caution in the industry, particularly in terms of the value and efficiency of these 'envirofuels' in miles per gallon. We would be interested in seeing the results of any back-to-back road tests of these new fuel mixes against ordinary diesel.

Congestion and road pricing

Until quite recently, the industry anticipated the introduction of a Lorry Road User Charge – a charge for all lorries using this country's roads – to be offset by a fuel duty discount for UK hauliers. Three years and £40 million later, the Government decided last year that the system would be too complicated to administer. A short delay later, a universal road pricing scheme for all vehicles is now being proposed, following Sir Rod Eddington's report on future transport policy. 1.8 million people expressed their strong feelings about the proposals by petitioning against it through the 10 Downing Street website. Number Ten then asked us to make our contribution to the debate on the website. In it we broadly state that we do not think that road pricing will work and that it is not an answer to Britain's congestion problems.

We do not think that the crude expedient of attempting to price people off the roads will work. The suggestion is for graduated peak and off-peak prices to discourage people from using their cars during the rush hour. We say that we simply do not know at what price people would agree to leave their cars at home or delay their trip to work in the morning, if at all. This type of pricing scheme certainly does not appear to have discouraged peak-time users of the railways.

Our fear is that road pricing will end up as nothing more than a journey tax, which will give more money to the Government, but which will not actually solve congestion on the roads.

Obviously, the road haulage industry could not be interested in any form of road pricing unless it offered a substantial discount to compensate for fuel duty to put us on a level footing with our European counterparts. Moreover, as essential users of the roads, supplying the necessities of life – bread, milk, goods – when the customer needs them, not according to prescribed peak or off-peak hours, the road haulage industry would have to be exempt, at the very least, from peak-time charges.

Other proposals on the cards include regional charging schemes administered by local authorities, requiring an in-cab black box to be fitted. This would cause needless cost for road haulage firms if trucks had to have boxes fitted, just in case they might need to go to a particular region. We believe that road haulage firms should be exempt from all local authority charging regimes. They are nothing short of a tax on the supply of the essentials of life.

Driver's hours and digital tachographs

On 11th April 2007, Regulation 561/2006 is being introduced to replace the 'old' Drivers' Hours Rules and make them easier to use with a digital tachograph. The basic limits are unchanged, though there are some minor changes, such as a new weekly limit of 56 hours, and this includes all driving, including that which was previously seen as 'off road'. There are also additional points with respect to mandatory second drivers on crewed vehicles and periods of rest.

In connection with the recording of drivers' hours, we are particularly concerned about issues that have come to light concerning digital tachographs, which are now obligatory in all new vehicles. The technology which has been adopted, originally conceived in the late 1980s/early 1990s, only registers time in full minutes. This means that every time a vehicle stops for longer than two minutes and then starts off again, the tachograph will jump forward to the nearest minute. Thus, if you are starting off at 2 hours 21 minutes and 2 seconds, it will jump to 2 hours and 22 minutes. Those 58 seconds may not sound like a great deal, but added up over a day of deliveries and drops, the over-recording of driver time could be anything up to 30 or 40 minutes when compared with an analogue equivalent.

The RHA recently conducted a back-to-back comparison of two identical vehicles; one with a digital tachograph and one with an analogue tachograph disc. The outcome clearly demonstrates a major issue with regard to the accuracy of digital tachographs. Our European counterparts have suggested a disbenefit to the average trucker of about 15 per cent on productivity using a digital tachograph compared with an analogue system. That is a colossal effect – and in fact, reductions in productivity as high as 30 per cent have been suggested.

What this shows is that the introduction of the new driving hours in conjunction with the technology chosen to record those driving hours, is actually likely to prove a disaster for the industry and for the European economy generally. There is an urgent need to scrap the technology which took so long to introduce that it is outdated, and replace it with something more advanced.

Truck/trailer registration and driver training

The high number of incidents on UK roads involving foreign operators is of ongoing concern, so we support the proposals for a registration scheme at point of entry to help enforcement authorities identify foreign operators. We are also delighted to see the introduction of on-the-spot charges for infringements of road safety rules. When it comes into force in April 2007, the Road Safety Act 2006 will enable Police and officers from the Vehicle and Operator Services Agency (VOSA) to take on-the-spot deposits from foreign drivers who commit traffic offences, making it more difficult to escape penalties by leaving the country. A system of graduated fixed penalties is being introduced for commercial vehicles, both foreign and domestic, for offences including overloading, tachograph, Vehicle Excise Duty and driver's licence offences, as well as roadworthiness.

The RHA welcomes the progress towards setting up a vignette scheme to charge foreign hauliers.

There is doubtless some need for training in drivers unused to making the transfer from right-hand to left-hand driving. Too many of the accidents involving foreign trucks are due to what is generally termed 'side-swiping', where the vehicle pulls out to overtake, unaware of a vehicle just below their cab mirror, which they cannot see. To some extent, improvements in mirrors now required by the EU will assist in eliminating or reducing the number of incidents, but we think that more could be done to make drivers aware of the perils of making overtaking manoeuvres in a left-hand-drive truck.

We recently raised this issue at the International Road Transport Union (IRU) Goods Transport Liaison Committee with the European Union. We spoke at that session to 27 other EU countries' road haulage trade associations, expressing great concern about the number of accidents in which foreign drivers are involved in on the UK's roads and pointing out that every accident of this sort is a hold-up for thousands of other trucks. They were in agreement that when a foreign truck driver arrives in Dover, he enters the most congested road system in Europe, whereas a British or Irish right-hand drive haulier leaving Calais would have very much lighter traffic in which to become accustomed to driving on the right. I believe we touched a chord with the meeting and look forward to seeing some progress, as we cannot continue to accept the current high number of accidents that are taking place.

Writing on the eve of the biggest CV Show yet, where the road haulage industry will gather to display its latest developments, the RHA continues to put its case to the Government on behalf of its members. The recent invitation to contribute to the debate on road pricing is welcome encouragement in the ongoing campaign for fairer competition in the European marketplace and better recognition of the industry's vital function to UK trade.

Mercedes-Benz CharterWay – all the quality, service and commitment you'd expect.

Mercedes-Benz CharterWay is the international commercial vehicle, financial services, contract hire and fleet management arm of DaimlerChrysler – providing specialist financial, insurance and operational expertise to HGV and LCV operators of any size and in any sector through the Mercedes-Benz dealer network.

So whether it's a straightforward finance lease on a single vehicle or a comprehensive fleet management programme, we have an excellent track record in providing the very best advice and support.

For many operators today a Contract Hire agreement with Mercedes-Benz CharterWay is the ideal solution. Quite simply, it is designed to take away the major sources of hassle involved in running a commercial vehicle fleet. It combines a leasing arrangement with repair and maintenance. It requires no capital investment and the vehicle is off balance sheet. So, throughout the life of the arrangement, you know in advance precisely what your outgoings will be on a month-by-month basis. There are no hidden surprises or cash flow disrupting peaks and troughs. And it is delivered through a dedicated client services team with your own client services manager. Combine this, with online access to your fleet data and our unique driver training programme and you can see why it is such a popular choice for operators throughout the UK.

To find out more about how Mercedes-Benz CharterWay can help you and your organisation please call 0800 665 432, or visit our website at www.mercedes-benz.co.uk to find your local dealer.

LEGISLATION, LEGISLATION, LEGISLATION

John Lewis,
*Director General,
British Vehicle Rental and Leasing Association*

Whether from the UK or from Brussels, the impact of yet more legislation and regulation on an already heavily regulated industry, has been severe.

In 2006, it distorted the market for new vehicles, not once but twice. In April, there was a dramatic pull forward from May in advance of the compulsory introduction of digital tachographs, while in September there was a similar pull forward to avoid the registration date for Euro IV on 1st October.

The numbers, both in terms of actual units and percentage increase, were significant. Registration figures from the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency show an increase in sales of trucks over 3.5 tonnes of more than 5,500 in April, an increase of some 110 per cent over the same month in the previous year. The pull forward was less dramatic for the Euro IV blip, but it still showed a 35 per cent hike over the previous September, with an additional 2,200 units being registered. For the year as a whole, the market in this sector ended up some 5.6 per cent down, a situation that was perhaps unsurprising given the uncertainty and the unwillingness to purchase the new technology, especially Selective Catalytic Reduction (SCR), needed to make Euro IV work.

But if those were the results, what were the causes of these dramatic swings?

Introduction of digital tachographs

For digital tachographs there was a real antipathy towards their introduction. Perhaps not as strong as when the original analogue tachographs were introduced, when there were cries of 'the spy in the cab', but vehement nonetheless. And the technology needed to run digital tachographs is of course, not as simple as merely slotting in a new card to the tachograph.

First, each driver has to be equipped with a smart card, while to download the data there has to be a company card that carries the data from the vehicle and which is then read by a computer. And of course drivers did not want to buy their cards, at a cost of £38 pounds each and only lasting five years, until they absolutely had to.

Operators, equally, did not want to move to the new technology, which was perceived as being more difficult and, importantly, more expensive, until

Operators and drivers have been reluctant to adopt the digital tachograph technology which became compulsory in new trucks from 1st April 2006

DON'T COMPROMISE WITH A 'ONE-SIZE-FITS-ALL' FLEET PACKAGE

*Steve Durrant, Managing Director,
Mercedes-Benz
CharterWay*

As the fleet manager 'fights the fires' resulting from volatile fuel prices, increased competition and amendments to legislation, Mercedes-Benz CharterWay is coming to the freight industry's aid.

The international commercial vehicle, financial services, contact hire and fleet management arm of DaimlerChrysler offers complete transport solutions in both ownership and leasing, regardless of the organisation's size, sector or operational requirements, in partnership with its franchised commercial dealer network throughout Europe. The Mercedes-Benz CharterWay range of finance products have been designed to eliminate the red tape associated with managing a fleet, allowing companies to focus on core business activities.

Tailored services

Additionally, Mercedes-Benz CharterWay products can be tailored to fit customer's individual requirements, ensuring clients are not put into a position where they have to compromise their needs with a 'one-size-fits-all' solution.

Steve Durrant, Managing Director of Mercedes-Benz CharterWay, said his customers found that investing in a finance package that was tailored specifically to their business helped certain operators achieve maximum efficiency from their vehicle.

Durrant commented: "Each business has unique financing requirements, but our team has the expert knowledge to determine what your fleet requirements are and identify the most relevant fleet solution.

"Your Mercedes-Benz CharterWay dealer will take into account the nature of your business, how often your vehicles will need servicing, what kind of funds you have available upfront and the degree to which you expect your fleet will need to expand. The team will also advise you on your fleet disposal and your vehicles' service, maintenance and repair programme."

Charity project brings hope

A recent example of Mercedes-Benz CharterWay responding to a client's specific and 'individual' circumstances is its work with the national cancer charity Hope for Tomorrow on the development of the world's first mobile chemotherapy unit.

"Our team was able to work with the charity Hope for Tomorrow on developing the project, which will deliver life-saving treatment from the unit, a converted 18-tonne Axor," Durrant said. "Run by the oncology team from the Gloucestershire Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust, the unit will initially begin treating chemotherapy patients in Cirencester and Ross-on-Wye."

Mercedes-Benz CharterWay is now working with the project's volunteer drivers on training, a service available to all customers either on-site or at Mercedes-Benz CharterWay's dedicated training facility at Wentworth Park. "Our team was delighted to work on the project, which will make a difference to hundreds of lives," said Durrant.

Finance options

Mercedes-Benz CharterWay's range of finance options includes Hire Purchase or Hire Purchase with a Balloon payment, which allow a nominal deposit to be paid while the remaining cost, plus interest, is repaid through regular monthly payments with fixed or variable interest rates. The Hire Purchase with a Balloon payment option allows for a large payment at the end of the agreement, thereby reducing monthly repayments. Another method of financing acquisition is with Mercedes-Benz CharterWay's Contract Purchase, which also features low monthly repayments by agreeing on a guaranteed future value lump sum payment at the end of the contract's term.

Lease options

For some companies, leasing their commercial vehicles is a far more economical and realistic option. These clients may wish to consider a Finance Lease or Operating Lease package. With a Finance Lease, the vehicle is hired for a fixed period with a percentage of sale proceeds returned to you at the end of the contract. On an Operating Lease, monthly rentals are based on the difference between the price of the vehicle at the start of the agreement and its projected residual value, plus finance charges. This method avoids any large initial outlay and reduces the average monthly rental.

Contract hire

Alternatively, a Contract Hire package offers the fleet manager a combined leasing arrangement with repair and maintenance and support included in one fixed monthly payment.

"This means you know in advance precisely what your costs will be on a month-by-month basis," Durrant said. "There are no hidden surprises or cash flow-disrupting peaks and troughs.

"The Mercedes-Benz name is synonymous with quality, safety and reliability throughout the world. Our financial products and services consistently deliver on these high standards by taking the time to fully understand customer needs and offering tailored packages along with an unfailing commitment to customer service."

Rental operators may have to rely on customers to maintain the levels of AdBlue necessary for Euro IV compliance they too were forced to, so they bought old-technology vehicles right up to the deadline of 30th April.

Complying with Euro IV

Euro IV was also perceived as being difficult for operators. This may well be true for SCR-equipped vehicles, where Adblue has to be injected to reduce emissions to compliant levels. While for general operators, whether they buy or (increasingly) lease their vehicles, it means an additional check and top-up as necessary; for rental operators, it is potentially far more difficult. They have to rely on the renter checking the Adblue level in the tank, if it is out on rent for more than a few days, and then, of course, refilling it with Adblue as necessary. It may well be very tempting for drivers either not to refill the Adblue tank or to fill it with something else. Either scenario could well prove difficult for customer and rental company alike.

Aside from these two main issues, there was a raft of lesser ones that either affected the sector in 2006 or will do so this year.

Low emission London

The London Low Emission Zone is a false attempt at reducing pollution inside the M25 ring. False because, instead of encouraging the use of greener vehicles through the carrot of incentives, it merely shakes the stick of penalising higher polluting vehicles. The consequences of imposing the Zone may be somewhat more radical than those intended, since it may be that industry will decamp from within the Zone – where it already faces significant costs – and move out to lower-cost areas altogether.

O-licence

On the costs front, we faced a challenge from the way that O-licence fees may be collected in the future. A proposal came forward to collect these fees through the annual MOT test. This would be unfair on rental companies and their customers. As rental companies do not operate the vehicles they hire out, they do not need an O-licence. Were the government to roll up the current fee structure in that of MOT test fees, then commercial vehicle rental companies would have no alternative but to pass on such costs to their customers. This in a marketplace that is already highly competitive and where rates are cut to the bone as a matter of course.

Speed limiters

And finally on the legislative front, new laws came in on 1st January that extended radically the number of commercial vehicles that must now be fitted with speed limiters. This is EU legislation and, like much that comes from Brussels, it is complicated and difficult to interpret, especially as it will mean that some vehicles will need to be retro-fitted with appropriate speed-limiting devices.

I have talked at some length about the legislation that is impacting the industry now and in the future but of course the rental and leasing market for commercial vehicles is not all wrapped up in such legislative issues. The reality is that there is a bright and vibrant marketplace out there where any number of companies compete for business. Sadly, not all operate to the same standards of quality nor of safety. Indeed the BVRLA ran a campaign last year to remind people of the dangers of renting from the so-called cowboys. Yes, their rates might be cheaper initially but just look at their vehicles, their standards and ultimately their value for money. The best deal is rarely the cheapest deal.

HOW DO WE PUT RIGHT DECADES OF NEGLECT ON SKILLS?

Dr Mick Jackson,
Director of Skills Development, Skills for Logistics

I am not sure there are any big answers to putting right decades of neglect on skills in the logistics sector in the short and medium term, at least none that would satisfy either companies in the sector or the government. However, we think we have at least identified the right route and some people at least are ready to start following it. It is a long journey but all trips, however long, start with a few steps.

Research commissioned by Skills for Logistics, the Sector Skills Council for the freight logistics industries (the first research of its kind across the whole logistics sector) has identified six key issues relating to skills in the sector:

- Image of the sector
- Diversity
- Basic Skills
- Other Skills Gaps
- Quality of training supply
- Employer investment in training

These six issues are not mutually exclusive – far from it – they interact to produce a vicious circle which is bringing the industry down.

The logistics sector has such a bad image that it is extremely difficult to attract a balanced profile for the workforce. This contributes to marked diversity problems, with only 23 per cent of the workforce being female (all-sector average 47 per cent), less than one per cent of LGV drivers being women and one per cent from the black and ethnic minorities. Another demographic time bomb ticking away is the fact that only nine per cent of logistics employees are under 25, whilst 41 per cent are aged 45 or older.

Logistics and basic skills

So, we are poor at attracting the right people into the logistics industry. It is too often considered to be a 'job of last resort' – if you can't get a proper job, work in a warehouse! This accentuates the basic skills issue which the sector has in common with many other sectors as a legacy of a school education system that fails miserably to produce leavers who are employable.

Skills gaps and training provision

With people too often moving on, we are also not good at keeping people in the industry and this leads to skills gaps in those that are left, especially in the junior and middle management areas.

As skills gaps become more apparent, the quality of training supply gets blamed, especially because it is supply-led, often irrelevant and normally inconsistent across the UK. This leads to little commitment to and investment in training by employers, which in turn leads to a poor image for logistics, and round we go again.

This vicious circle has proven to be the malaise of an industry which should 'tick all the boxes' for bright young entrants and yet it clearly does not. This is where the first steps of the journey come in.

It is relatively easy to address each of the six issues individually through focused initiatives. However the logistics sector badly needs all of these issues to be addressed simultaneously if the vicious circle is to be broken. The only overall solution to all of these issues is continuous professional development or CPD.

The Skills for Logistics mission

The overall mission of Skills for Logistics is therefore:

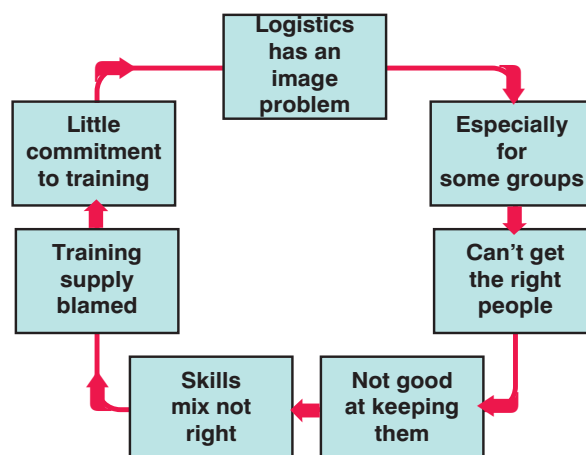

"To move companies in the logistics sector away from ad hoc purchases of training and towards continuous professional development."

This is indeed a long journey, and for many companies in the sector, an epic one that they see no reason to embark on. If we are to encourage such an odyssey, we need to provide some real support to those employers, not just give them vague signposts and a black and white map.

Strategic objectives

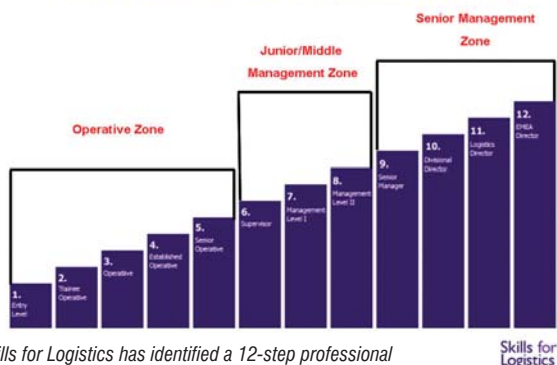

CPD needs three props in particular if it is to be attractive to employers and employees:

- It needs a game-board or a framework on which careers and development paths can be plotted and explained.
- It needs a support system, including the provision of relevant training and mentoring that is accessible to all companies, irrespective of their size and geographic location.

The above diagram illustrates the vicious circle which the industry needs to break to improve its skills deficit

The Professional Development Stairway

Skills for Logistics has identified a 12-step professional development stairway for the sector

- It needs a positive image for the sector, which will attract people to come into the sector, and to stay within the sector, to develop a career that they see as worthwhile.

These three concerns translate into the key strategic objectives for Skills for Logistics (SfL) as we attempt to install the infrastructure, wiring and plumbing to support CPD across the sector, and across the UK. They are:

- To ensure that SfL's 12-point Professional Development Stairway is considered to be THE framework on which careers planning, manpower planning, CPD, qualifications, training programmes, funding and public policy are based;
- To develop an effective and responsive training supply industry, which delivers programmes that are relevant and consistent across the UK, helping to make CPD support available to companies of all sizes;

- To move logistics towards being a sector with a professional image, that people want to work in and stay working in, and which is seen as modern, progressive, attractive and central to the economic health of the UK.

Having identified these three objectives, service level agreements, known as Logistics Skills Agreements are being put into place around the UK with relevant policy-making and funding bodies in order to ensure that the training supply industry is able to meet the demands clearly articulated by employers in the sector.

The three objectives lead on in turn to fifteen priority action areas such as Skills for Life, building a delivery network for training supply and easing entry routes into the sector. Each of these action areas will result in a clear action plan within each English region and each home nation.

We started by talking about a journey, a long journey, an epic journey. It is one which, uniquely, the public and private sectors are taking together. Long – yes, ambitious – yes – but not impossible if the opportunities are grasped by all concerned. It does represent a real chance to improve an industry that really does need all the help it can get.

For further information about the Logistics Skills Agreement and its implications please contact the author, e-mail: mick.jackson@skillsforlogistics.org

ESTABLISHING A FUEL MANAGEMENT PROGRAMME

Peter Binham,
*Press Officer,
Freight Best Practice Programme*

With tight margins and intense competition in the transport sector, it is vital for every operator, transport manager and driver to understand and manage fuel efficiency. In most road transport operations, fuel accounts for at least 30 per cent of operating costs, so fuel management is the logical place to start on the road to operational efficiency.

Freight Best Practice is a Department for Transport-sponsored programme that has been established to increase, improve and promote efficiency and sustainability within the freight industry. The programme has developed an array of publications and technology that are all completely free. One of the most popular publications over recent years has been its Fuel Management Guide, which helps operators establish a Fuel Management Programme tailored to their operation.

The Fuel Management Guide uses key performance indicators developed by a working group of industry representatives, which are based on tried-and-tested performance measures already used in the freight industry. The guide is designed for fleet operators who have a variety of different levels of experience and knowledge about fuel management. It provides detailed information on the processes that need to be undertaken to successfully implement such a programme. Ultimately, a fuel management programme will have the effect of lowering operating costs, thus raising profits, whilst also reducing harmful emissions into the environment.

The guide is split into six chapters, each giving a step by step approach to managing fuel. The guide also includes a fuel management checklist, case studies and conversion factors.

Fuel management

So what is a fuel management programme? A fuel management programme (FMP) is a method that enables operators to monitor and manage fuel from the point of entry to the point of use within an operation. A FMP encompasses many aspects, but essentially it recognises that fuel is a precious operational resource and will enable you to keep track of your stock, fuelling and fuel usage at all times.

Measuring and managing fuel performance

The more you understand about the factors that affect fuel efficiency, the more control you will have over them. This is why it is helpful to create and implement a performance management process in order to identify any problem factors within your operation. Once identified, you can take action against these deficiencies. It is important you set up this new process before introducing any new practices and systems in your operation. This will help you target the identified problem areas better, instead of wasting valuable resources in areas that are performing well.

One key consistent message from the programme is: 'If you don't measure it, you can't manage it'. It is for this reason that the programme has developed the Fleet Performance Management Tool Kit. This is a simple, free Excel programme that can be installed on your PC and does all the hard work for you. All that is required from you is to put in as many or as few key performance indicators (KPIs) as you wish. It will produce easy-to-read charts and graphs showing vehicle performance in terms of cost, utilisation,

If you don't measure it, you can't manage it

ANTI-SIPHON SALES ORDERS SET TO DOUBLE

TruckProtect's InstantFit NECK-IT® fuel anti-siphon device is proving very popular with hauliers

TruckProtect says sales of its InstantFit NECK-IT® anti-fuel-theft devices are set to exceed 20,000 by the end of 2007, as hauliers continue to recognise the benefit of fitting their unique fuel security devices.

The company describes its range of fuel anti-siphon appliances as the first complete solution to fuel theft for commercial vehicles ranging from trucks to buses, and even specialist vehicles such as road sweepers.

TruckProtect's range of InstantFit NECK-IT® devices are already a UK best seller and the company is now starting to make significant inroads into Europe.

The InstantFit NECK-IT units are easy to fit, with no drilling, gluing or riveting needed and are fully transferable between vehicles. Cost-effective to purchase, they have no moving parts and are short enough to stop siphoning to the top of the tank. Additionally there is no interference with operational efficiency handling pump speeds of up to 120 litres per minute without splashback, welling or spillage. They are capable of withstanding regular and prolonged use. Every unit comes with a lifetime guarantee.

TruckProtect has also introduced a new SenderStop device, which protects particularly vulnerable fuel tank sender units from siphoning.

SenderStop protects vulnerable fuel tank sender units from siphoning

To further complement its range, and to broaden its presence within the marketplace, TruckProtect has also introduced the Wheel Stop-It! tamper-proof nut, which comes with a unique security code, tailored to each individual customer.

The Wheel Stop-It! coded nut has been launched in response to the industry's requirement for increased security to prevent wheel theft and tyre-swapping. Totally secure, it cannot be removed by anything other than the fastener socket bearing the matching encrypted Wheel Stop-It! code.

The problem of fuel theft is rife and one which is costing the transport and distribution industry many millions. By offering a simple solution, TruckProtect is confident that this problem can be eradicated.

customer service and compliance. Obviously, the more KPIs you put in, the more you will get out, but this tool is an excellent first step on the road to fuel efficiency. Fuel types, purchase and storage

Once you have established a comprehensive monitoring process for your FMP, you can then consider elements of your operation, which could have a positive effect on fuel efficiency. It is therefore important to understand the specification and standards of fuel, the factors affecting the purchase, storage and stock control of fuel and the main alternatives to diesel and petrol. By analysing these considerations, you can decide which option best suits your operation in relation to costs and use.

Fuel efficiency through skills development

In today's economy, continual learning is critical to achieving efficiency. Your employees are your principal business asset and play a vital role in any commercially successful business. Investing in them will enable you to reap the rewards that will pay off immediately and in the future. If employees can work in a more efficient and effective manner, there can be substantial savings to be made.

Many employers try to gain efficiency through 'work pressure' rather than trying to enhance employees' skills, which can lead to an unhappy workplace and result in employees leaving an organisation. Essentially, developing skills through focused training and educating an employee about the importance of their role within the business can help to improve the operation's overall fuel efficiency. As technology is becoming more important to achieving efficiency, it is important to make sure that your employees can adapt to these technological advances.

Equipment and systems

Equipment, systems, vehicle specification and telematics all play an important role in improving fuel efficiency. Spending time in developing an accurate and appropriate vehicle specification will help you ensure that your vehicles are closely matched to the tasks they are expected to perform and will improve both fuel and overall operational efficiency.

Attention must also be given to the load-carrying part of the vehicle, whether it is a trailer or the body of a rigid vehicle. It will generate considerable aerodynamic drag. It will also have an impact on a vehicle's overall productivity and ease of operation.

When considering a FMP it is essential that you understand the overall importance of vehicle maintenance. The proper functions of this task will undoubtedly create better fuel efficiency within the organisation. For the vehicle operator, the benefits of a comprehensive maintenance policy will not only save money on future maintenance, but will also save on the fuel bill costs. The programme should not only include in-house mechanics or independent mechanics, but also the transport office staff and drivers.

Introducing a fuel management programme is made simple and straightforward with the assistance of the Fuel Management Guide. The guide should be used as a reference document; it does not need to be read in one sitting. You can refer to certain sections of it when there is a need to do so and it should be an essential tool for any operator trying to become more efficient.

DIGITAL TACHOGRAPHS – NEW DUTIES FOR OPERATORS

The Freight Transport Association

offers some guidance on digital tachograph usage

Digital tachographs were introduced in new goods vehicles from 1st May 2006 instead of conventional analogue tachographs.

The electronic devices to record driving time, rest and break periods will need to be used by all operators in future to monitor their drivers' compliance with EU drivers' hours rules. However, there is no requirement to retrofit them to existing vehicles and, in most circumstances, these vehicles can continue to use conventional tachographs for the remainder of their useful life. This means, however, that operators and drivers need to adapt to using two different systems for recording drivers' hours depending on the age of vehicle that is being driven.

Digital tachographs work by storing data in their own memory and by recording it separately on an official 'driver card' inserted into the tachograph during the period the vehicle is being driven. A driver card is issued to each driver upon application to the Driver Vehicle and Licensing Agency (DVLA). Operators must periodically download data from the digital tachograph and from drivers' cards and analyse them to check that the drivers' hours rules have been complied with. Data from conventional tachograph charts will also need to be incorporated, where drivers drive different vehicles. All data needs to be assembled into a contiguous record of a driver's activity and these records kept and made available for inspection for a period of up to 12 months.

The digital system

The FTA's Digital Tachograph Compliance Guide

It has been legal to use a digital tachograph since August 2004 and the necessary equipment and facilities to do so voluntarily have been available in the UK since August 2005. But it is mandatory to fit digital tachographs to new vehicles first registered from 1st May 2006. Therefore, if you are expecting to take delivery of any new vehicles or expecting to hire or lease vehicles in the future, you will need plan for digital tachograph usage to avoid the cost and inconvenience of being unprepared.

The Freight Transport Association (FTA) has prepared a 24-page Compliance Guide to Digital Tachographs, available exclusively from the FTA (contact details below). This compliance guide sets out the legal background and the practical steps that need to be taken to ensure continued compliance with drivers' hours rules when using digital tachographs. The content is summarised below, but for more detailed information, readers are referred to the full Compliance Guide.

Why the change from analogue to digital?

The change has been instigated by the European Union in order to improve the security of the recording system. The digital tachograph is thought to be less vulnerable than the analogue system to illegal interference by users who wish to falsify data. As the new system will provide data in a digital format, it should also allow for easier and better analysis by enforcement authorities and vehicle operators, once all information is digital.

FTA digital tachograph action plan

Operators expecting to use digital tachographs need to take five key actions to ensure they have the right equipment to use the new technology; that their staff are familiar with the new procedures; and that they are able to continue to keep adequate records for the purposes of compliance with the EU drivers' hours rules.

1. Apply for driver cards and company cards

Apply for a driver card for any driver that may need to drive vehicles fitted with a digital tachograph. The operator needs at least one company card at every location where tachographs are to be downloaded. Smartcards are issued in Great Britain by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) and in Northern Ireland by Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland (DVLNI).

2. Acquire download equipment

Data stored on a digital tachograph, or on a driver card, can only be downloaded using special equipment. A range of different types of download device are available depending on how the data is to be analysed.

Further guidance is available on the considerations, range and availability of digital download equipment.

3. Train your drivers

Digital tachographs are complicated pieces of equipment and drivers need careful instruction about how to operate them and how to make manual entries using the keys and prompts on the tachograph screen. Drivers also need to be made aware of the importance of their driver card and what to do if it is lost or stolen.

4. Decide how the data will be analysed

Once downloaded, digital data can be analysed, using specially written software running on PCs or laptops. In most cases, data will need to be integrated with information from conventional tachograph charts to build up a complete record for drivers driving old and new vehicles. Stand-alone software packages are available for running on PCs for those who want to analyse their own data. Alternatively, analysis services are offered by a number of providers, including the Freight Transport Association. These are either visiting services where data is analysed and reported to operators personally on site, or bureau services that analyse data transmitted via the internet, or received on memory cards through the post.

5. Train your office staff

Having decided how data will be handled and analysed, staff will need to be familiarised with the additional procedures for downloading drivers' cards and vehicle units, and the 'dos and don'ts' to make sure drivers' hours record-keeping and analysis continues to proceed smoothly.

The remainder of this section is divided into the following main headings.

- Vehicles and strategic planning
- Driver cards
- Company cards
- Download, storage and analysis
- Training

It is intended to guide you through the process of preparation for digital tachographs.

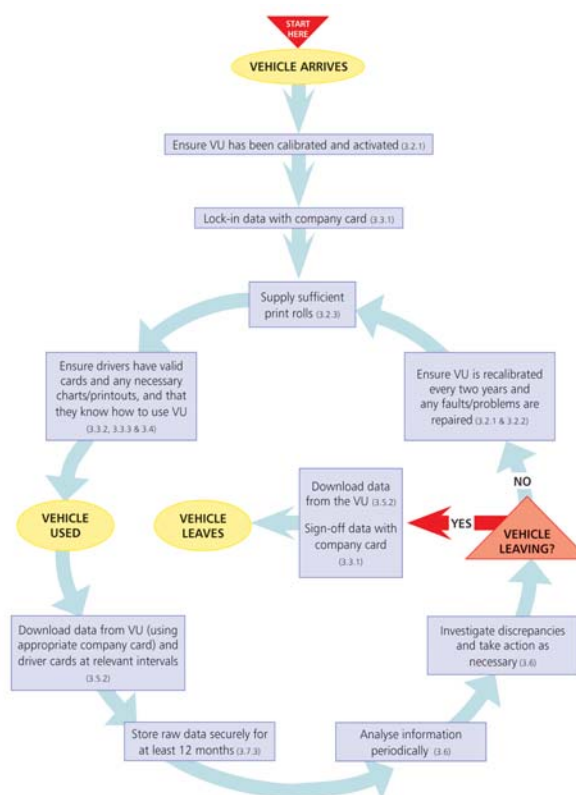

Diagram showing digital tachograph vehicle use cycle

Vehicles and strategic planning

Know when you are likely to be first using digital tachographs. All new vehicles first registered from 1st May 2006 must be fitted with a digital tachograph. Clearly you must ensure you are aware of your organisation's vehicle procurement policy. You must also think about any vehicles you will be hiring in the future. Speak to your suppliers of hired vehicles to find out how long they can guarantee to provide you with vehicles fitted with analogue equipment. If you will be relying on them to provide you with these vehicles, plan to re-assess the situation on a regular basis.

Retrofitting digital tachographs

There is no general retrofit requirement. However, digital tachographs must be fitted retrospectively to goods vehicles that meet all three of the following conditions:

- You need to have the whole tachograph replaced – i.e. all parts of the recording system, including the head, transmitter and wiring. Unless the whole system is faulty, you can replace individual components with analogue parts.
- The vehicle was first registered from 1st January 1996, and
- The vehicle has a maximum weight over 12 tonnes

RISK MANAGER

GlobalLive's inclusive NOW! Risk Manager module provides reports designed to mitigate, safeguard, and assist with legal compliance responsibilities, addressing HR issues, supporting obligations under the Duty of Care Act and Health and Safety regulations, and legal compliance with the European Working Time Directive.

Employee Assistance	Real time monitoring facilities to assist employees if they are lost or broken down
Employee Support	Pro-active CRM and live monitoring to support drivers in terms of late deliveries and unforeseen scheduling problems
Speed Alerts	Instant notification of drivers exceeding designated speed limits
Driver Profiles	Mitigate both employer and employee obligations to control driver performance
Journey Reports	Records driver performance in perpetuity and supports the employer's responsibility to monitor, control, and record events
Panic Alarm	Provides lone worker protection and employee security and mitigates responsibilities under Health and Safety legislation

..... The Next Generation in Mobile Asset Tracking Management

A CONSTANTLY EVOLVING TELEMATICS SOLUTION

Tracking to telematics – new technologies from GlobalLive provide logistics management tools

NOW! Assist gives job information, satellite navigation, signature capture, e-mail-based messaging and complete drivers' log, including tachograph status

GPS

'Tracking' became popular around five years ago when a few products dominated the tracking sector with first-to-market low technology GPS (global positioning system) or GSM (global system for mobile communications) offerings. These products were based on the then newly-accessible GPS technology, enabling a GPS receiver to provide a reasonably accurate longitude/latitude location of the black box in a vehicle.

GPRS

Major advances in geo-positioning devices, and the integration of complementary emerging data transfer technologies of GPRS (General Packet Radio Service), transformed these early 'tracking' devices into technologically sophisticated fleet management solutions.

GIS

Today's advanced telematics offerings use geographic information system (GIS) mapping technologies and convert whole fleet locations and activities onto technologically sophisticated but user-simple mapping solutions. The information can then be accessed from an internet-enabled personal computer, laptop or handheld mobile recipient device – from anywhere in the world.

"Our team of software writers and product development engineers have provided GlobalLive with a unique design that complements today's robust GPRS data networks and provides our customers with a unique facility to achieve the 'live on screen' and 'one-click instant reporting' USP of our NOW! products," states GlobalLive's Technical Director, Matt Redfean.

Tracking to telematics – mobile devices and hand-held systems

GlobalLive Ltd are very much aware of the convergence of newly emerging technologies, consisting of hand-held units with sophisticated mapping, supporting telematics applications, which provide satellite navigation, route planning and signature capture.

The integration of these technologies is central to GlobalLive's commitment to extending the boundaries of technology to provide fleet managers with accurate, secure, and above all manageable answers to the issues of cost-effective fleet monitoring and control, and job planning.

These are constantly evolving, future-proofed and scalable solutions, offering a risk-free option and a significant return on investment over future years.

"There is a real need to educate the market to ensure end-users purchase a product appropriate to their needs," says Philip Fretwell, Technical Sales Director of GlobalLive Ltd. "A simple, low-cost tracking system provides the 'Where are you now?' and 'Where have you been?' data. A telematics solution is a genuine fleet management tool, providing whole fleet monitoring in real time. It addresses fleet security and risk management issues, and is equally advantageous to employee and employer alike. Professionally implemented telematics offerings end the days of 'spy in the cab' claims and adverse employee attitudes."

Fleet and job management

GlobalLive solutions focus on the development of meaningful and practical applications of telematics. They provide affordable, commercial solutions, designed around individual customer requirements.

Significant benefits include:

- Savings on management time and fleet operating costs
- Improved traffic control and fleet deployment
- Cost-effective journey plans, reducing time wastage and fuel costs
- Complete control of job costings – mileage, time on job, and overtime
- Reduced off-journey travelling and idling
- Accurate time sheet information, reducing time sheet errors and overpayments
- Vehicle and trailer tracking

Automatic, live and instant security features are built in to assist risk management procedures and provide security of both fleet and goods in transit. These live 'alerts' are available as screen pop-ups, SMS or e-mail. They include:

- Curfew alerts
- Speeding alerts
- Goods in Transit alerts
- Asset Movement alerts
- Power Take-Off alerts
- Exception alerts, providing full details of all activities outside prescribed limits

The GlobalLive mobile worker PDA (personal digital assistant) system provides:

- Job planning
- Satellite navigation
- Signature capture
- Integration to back office systems

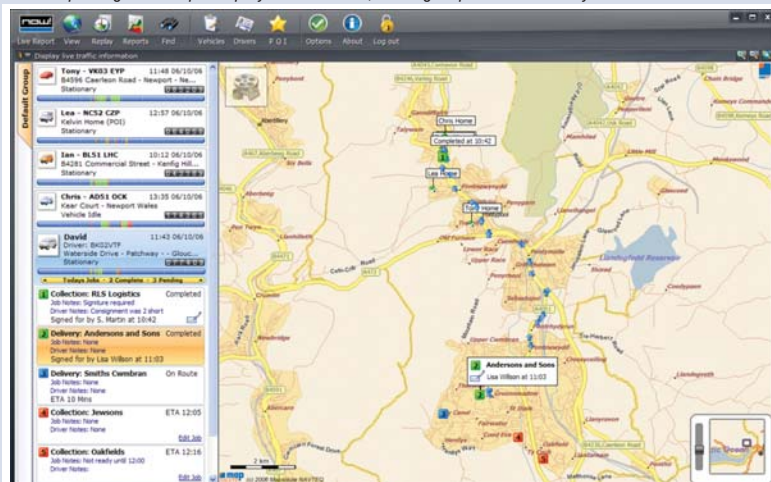

NOW! incorporates a Risk Manager module as an integral part of the package, providing an extensive range of reports designed to mitigate, safeguard and assist with legal compliance responsibilities, including the European Working Time Directive.

Stay in control

David Clayton, a director of GlobalLive, is clear about the real benefits of telematics solutions: "Using telematics allows you to control, monitor, manage and communicate at previously unimaginable levels of detail, achieving advanced levels of efficiency in day-to-day operations and giving a hugely increased insight into your business and how you are looking after it."

WIRELESS FLEET MANAGEMENT SOLUTIONS

Webtech's simple new Driver ID kit

Quadrant is a wireless vehicle services system that provides users with GPS-based location information in real time for efficient fleet management. Offered on a scalable platform that allows for a wide range of future enhancements, Quadrant provides mapping, reporting and messaging capability, as well as GPS fleet tracking and two-way messaging services.

Over 28 reseller partners in Europe and the Middle East have recognised the potential customer benefits of offering the latest in vehicle telematics, in-vehicle data connectivity and fleet management technology available through the WebTech Wireless (WTW) vehicle-based solution.

At the heart of the Quadrant Fleet Management System is the WTW Locator. Data gathered from individual vehicles by the device is transmitted via wireless networks to WebTech's Operations Centre. Using a password, the data can then be accessed via any internet-enabled PC.

The WT5000 Locator continues to be one of the most popular automotive locator units worldwide, recently enhanced by the addition of the user-friendly Driver ID kit and WT1700 Bluetooth adapter.

The WT5000 Locator

The Driver ID kit provides a simple and economical way of ensuring only authorised drivers are using company vehicles. When fitted to a WTW Locator, it can block ignition or starter motor until a driver is validated, as well as providing driving hours and performance reports. Individual drivers 'log in' using a unique key fob identifier. These driver logs can be used to create timesheet reports, detailing start/finish times, accumulated mileage and performance.

Quadrant's vehicle tracking and telematics portal now includes European mapping from Microsoft, powered by NavTeq, as standard on WTW client software, as well as route geofencing capability.

Using the 1-Wire connection protocol, the WT5000 and 6000 Locators can also report from multiple temperature sensors. Conforming to EN 12830, the device enables users to set high and low thresholds, sending alarms if temperature falls outside of limits.

TELEMATICS – STILL A TOOL FOR THE 21ST CENTURY?

Don Armour,
*Manager,
Fleet Management Information,
Freight Transport Association*

Just how receptive are commercial vehicle operators towards the adoption of telematics systems as part of their management toolkit? Results of surveys of members of the Freight Transport Association (FTA) in past years have suggested that, for many operators, the status quo is just fine and that the telematics jungle is a scary place in which to venture unless you have to.

Difficulties about making the leap into telematics are perceived as many and varied. Some operators feel that telematics providers have not done their homework and simply do not know about the intricacies of fleet management, the supply chain or the consequential problems caused by congestion or working time. Some companies, to their credit, might have tried systems in the past, but found the technology lacking and promises unfulfilled. But another big disincentive stems from the fact that so many suppliers are offering so many systems that standardisation is difficult for users to track down, if it exists at all.

Add that to the complication that most fleets contain vehicles from various manufacturers, and it is hardly surprising that managers shy away from committing themselves to what can often be an expensive investment which may not 'talk' to all their vehicles nor communicate with existing IT systems in the warehouse or payroll office.

Fleets buy in to telematics

FTA believes that it was initially large fleet operators, with vehicles based in several locations, which were the main customers for buying in to telematics systems.

Surveys undertaken in 2002 and 2004 showed a marked increase in the number of members who acquired routing and scheduling packages, but only a slight increase in those who took on vehicle tracking software. This suggests to us that big fleet operators quickly saw the benefits that a well-trialled, well-installed and well-managed telematics system could offer. A lot of money could be saved in terms of reduced costs (through the use of fewer vehicles and a reduction in dead mileage) and higher efficiency, for some companies. Logistics companies are reportedly the biggest users of telematics (23 per cent of 'solutions' sold) with petro-chemicals taking 21 per cent, food and drinks companies, 15 per cent, and retailers, 14 per cent.

But the fears referred to above in many ways reflect the past. The telematics industry is trying hard to achieve standardisation and FTA believes that, within the next five years, at least some elements of telematics packages (for example, road-user charging systems across Europe) are likely to be based, increasingly, on a common technology platform.

In 2006 the Department for Transport commissioned a study on a multi-functional vehicle telematics unit which clearly indicates that, even if road user charging for the UK is not currently top of the agenda and unpopular with some members of the public – as demonstrated in the recent on-line survey, it has certainly not gone away.

Tracking – advantages and disadvantages

One pan-European application of telematics which has political support in Brussels is the development of 'eCall', an in-vehicle service that combines the use of GPS location technology with airbag sensors and mobile phones to automatically alert the emergency services to the location of an accident. This could have benefits in reducing the time taken by the emergency services to reach the scene and administer aid to vehicle occupants.

Devices which can help locate lost children, absconded prisoners or stolen vehicles are of great value, but are also a possible means for governments to impose additional taxation: a development that FTA will monitor closely.

Software programmes and advanced wireless devices are being developed which provide companies with total visibility of their assets, cheaper and

OPTIMAL PLANNING WITH THE MARKET LEADER IN EUROPE

*Ian Chadwick,
TimoCom Account
Manager for Great Britain and Ireland*

The TimoCom Soft- und Hardware GmbH, Düsseldorf, was founded on 1st April 1997 and is a service provider to the freight and haulage industry. Within the space of just a few years TimoCom has progressed from a start up venture to being an internationally established company and has become the market leader in Europe with its international freight and vehicle exchange TimoCom TRUCK & CARGO®

The product

As innovation and quality are the guiding principles of the company, TimoCom constantly makes every effort to enhance its exchange. As a result, the company can now offer the very latest of all generations of freight exchanges: The online version of TimoCom TRUCK & CARGO®!

With this new software, transport companies can benefit from optimal capacity utilization quicker and more easily than ever before. The program works on the principle of a barter exchange: carriers and haulage contractors can enter either their free truck capacities or freight offers into the database, or they can select from a wide range of freight and vehicle offers with the specifications they require.

New customers may try out the full version free of charge and without any obligation for a period of four weeks. After that, they can gain unlimited access to work with the database and the integrated TC eMAP calculation module for an attractive monthly fee of €119.90.

For further information please contact Mr. Ian Chadwick, Account Manager for Great Britain and Ireland at TimoCom on Tel: +49 (0)211 8826-2202, e-mail: ichadwick@timocom.com or visit: www.timocom.co.uk

Lorry-friendly sat-nav solutions, including important information for HGV drivers, are in development more easily than ever before, via the Internet, by mobile phone or by integrating with existing fleet or management tools.

The growth of sat-nav

One of the current growth sectors for telematics is in the sale of satellite navigation ('sat-nav') units. This is the cheap and easy way to buy in to basic telematics. The great advantage to fleet operators is that free-standing sat-nav units are easily transferred between vehicles when a new driver starts or an old vehicle is sold. About seven million units were sold across Europe in 2005 and sales of over 20 million are predicted for 2008.

Unfortunately, occasional inaccurate mapping and poor detail have led to stories in the press and reports to FTA of large vehicles using entirely unsuitable country lanes as drivers follow the route proposed by the sat-nav without also engaging their brains. Information such as width restrictions, weight limits, bridge heights, gradients, grounding risks and access restrictions needs to be built in if such problems are to be avoided in the future. The good news is that TomTom UK is looking at the possibility of creating a lorry-friendly mapping solution in conjunction with Navteq and TeleAtlas, which may be available by the end of 2007.

Messaging and routing systems

Companies in the telematics industry are continually adding refinements to what was ground-breaking not so very long ago and prices are falling. Vehicle tracking technology has now been integrated with an in-vehicle satellite navigation system, creating the first 'accept job and go' tracking and navigation product for fleet managers, according to Navman, whose M-Nav 650 device combines tracking, job dispatch messaging and state-of-the-art satellite navigation. It allows real-time messaging and routing from the transport company's office to their customer's warehouse thanks to GPS in conjunction with a GPRS communications network.

When a driver clicks an acknowledgement to accept the message from the traffic office, the device automatically shows the relevant on-screen map and how to get there: the driver simply has to drive and has no need to input any postcode details, thus reducing the chance of error.

The device can also manage working-time issues by offering reports on individuals, as well as vehicles, and it can send two-way text messages between the vehicle and the customer's premises via the internet. For approximately £1.50 per day, per vehicle, the deal includes free programme upgrades, so that fleet managers benefit from later advances in technology without having to re-invest in new hardware.

New long-life battery technology now allows transport managers to track unpowered assets as never before. One new device weighing just 420 grams, can operate for up to two years using six AA batteries. Information about the particular object to which the battery is attached (which might, for example, be a semi-trailer or an item of plant) can be obtained at an office via the internet or through a company's existing fleet management software, or simply by using a mobile phone.

RFID tags

Some industry observers believe that Radio Frequency Identification Devices, generally referred to as RFID tags, offer such tremendous possibilities for business and society in general that they will eventually replace bar codes in supermarkets. But their ability to report the location, identity, contents and history of items such as containers, stillages, pallets or individual parcels also raises concerns about personal privacy and security as well as technical interoperability and international compatibility. To address these concerns, the European Commission has set up a group to investigate the whole topic of RFIDs. Approximately 600 million tags were sold worldwide in 2005 and take-up over the next seven years is expected to increase by a factor of six, the number of tag readers by a factor of fifteen and the number of locations, also by a factor of fifteen over and above what is already in the market.

While the Government ponders what to do with road-user charging, the telematics industry continues to innovate and develop new products which, for some operators, undoubtedly assist fleet management.

Use of telematics can provide benchmarks against which performance can be measured. Driver training needs or vehicle maintenance shortcomings may be identified which, if not addressed, may put a company's operator licence in jeopardy.

FTA believes that the road freight sector will continue to buy in to this technology as and when customers demand it and that, within five years, all the major HGV manufacturers will include a standard specification, basic technological platform at no extra cost, into which more advanced modules, offering access to greater fleet management data, may be plugged as required.

SECURE FOR THE FUTURE OR SECURING THE NATION?

Chrys Rampley,
Manager – Security,
Road Haulage Association

The RHA Security Seminar, held at Towcester Racecourse on November 7th 2006, was underpinned by a strong partnership theme. Sponsored by Royal & SunAlliance, the seminar was opened by the Under Secretary of State for Policing, Security and Community Safety, Vernon Coaker MP. The event was well attended, including representatives from 18 police forces, and was supported by more than 30 trade exhibitors.

In his keynote speech, Vernon Coaker called for a partnership approach to tackling truck crime and congratulated the Road Haulage Association for the work it had done in this area, and particularly its newly-launched Road Haulage Minimum Security Standard.

Call for secure parking

Assistant Chief Constable David Ainsworth confirmed that the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) is committed to tackling freight crime and announced that an overall initiative to tackle organised crime would put a higher priority on lorry load theft. He said that £500,000 was being allocated to set up a vehicle crime intelligence service (AVCIS) and, due to the close link between drugs and freight crime, the policing approach was changing from passive to active. One area Mr Ainsworth highlighted as needing urgent attention was the issue of secure parking for trucks – a subject very close to the heart of the Road Haulage Association and its members.

Rising lorry crime

TruckPol, the national road freight crime intelligence unit, presented some startling statistics that showed the scale of lorry load and freight crime. In the past three and a half years, there have been 7,845 reported crimes. In 2005 alone, there were 2,455 incidents of freight-related theft, including 86 hijacks. These figures are even more alarming as the TruckPol report for 2006 reveals that crime has risen by 9.8 per cent and hijacks have increased by 50 per cent, to 129. TruckPol said that because of improved security on vehicles, there had been an increase in the use of violence, but thankfully no fatalities.

Insurance fraud

Insurance fraud was high on the agenda at the seminar. The Insurance Fraud Bureau outlined its activities and the recent explosion in 'slam-on' attacks on commercial vehicles. It said it has a database of over 160 million claims made since 1995 and its analytical software was working to detect trends in fraudulent claims. It emphasised the importance of recording the scene of any road traffic collision and taking pictures where possible of the vehicles involved and their occupants. It said the most important thing was to inform insurers as soon as possible of any incident. It outlined how some bus operators are fitting CCTV to vehicles and how this has helped it to fight fraudulent claims. The insurance industry would welcome a debate on how it could work more effectively with the industry.

Thatcham, the motor insurance repair research organisation, announced new insurance approval ratings for light commercial vehicles at the RHA Security Seminar. While this has to be welcomed, such a scheme for heavy commercial vehicles is awaited. Unfortunately, underwriters do not recognise vehicle security systems on some makes of truck at all.

Industry standard for security

The RHA has been working closely with ACPO Crime Prevention Initiative and the insurance industry to develop an industry-wide system which can not only help operators of all types of commercial vehicles to fight back against criminals, but also satisfy potential customers that all reasonable steps have been taken to secure loads, vehicles and premises. As a result, the Association is pleased to announce the launch of the Road Haulage Industry Security Standard (RHIMSS).

Operators can have their security procedures assessed by experienced assessors who have undergone thorough training, designed especially for this initiative. For those whose standards do not reach the necessary level in the first instance, an action plan will be provided to enable the operator to achieve compliance.

The Home Office Minister, Vernon Coaker, warmly welcomed this new initiative, particularly since it was created and is owned by the industry to tackle road freight crime in a systematic way. He also encouraged everyone in the freight and haulage industry to adopt these standards as they would not only deter criminals they would also give the police the tools to better identify, investigate and prosecute criminals involved in freight crime.

TruckWatch

There is of course no one solution to tackling road freight or indeed any other type of crime. Working in partnership is the only real and effective way

FASTENER SECURITY

Fit-lock Systems' new Torktainer is changing the future of the commercial body building industry. Commercial Fleet Managers and Transport Engineers are specifying the Torktainer as it has already proved that it vastly reduces time and costs on any new build, and especially when it comes to repair work. No expensive tooling is required – your existing impact wrench will do the job! The Torktainer is replaceable and reusable and is the only realistic answer for security in body panelling work. Easily controlled for different board densities, the Torktainer is unlike any other panelling system.

- Fit-lock Systems make fastener security their prime objective.
- Products are designed and developed by Fit-lock's own engineers to ensure the safe build of your vehicle.
- Excellent tooling and post sales service.
- Thirty years of experience in the commercial bodybuilding industry.
- Fit-lock Systems – enjoying success throughout the UK and Europe.

Fit-lock systems have provided their engineering expertise to industry for decades; they are a forward-looking company, always seeking to develop new products for a better build.

The Torktainer is one of the latest products in Fit-lock's impressive range of systems for your industry.

forward. The success of the partnership approach is demonstrated by the wealth of established initiatives focussed on the freight and haulage industry. Another partnership success story is the expansion of the South Yorkshire TruckWatch scheme, into a regional initiative covering the whole of Yorkshire and Humber.

The South Yorkshire TruckWatch scheme was set up by the Police in 1997 and is run by People United Against Crime (PUAC), a charity based in Sheffield, working in partnership with the police, the RHA and other interested parties, including transport companies. In the first full year of the TruckWatch operation, South Yorkshire crime statistics indicated that the theft of loads and vehicles fell by 66 per cent in that county.

Funding from Yorkshire Forward and the Regional Development Agency has allowed the TruckWatch scheme to become a regional movement, now involving partners including the three police forces and other transport companies in West Yorkshire, North Yorkshire and Humberside.

Following the initial launch of Yorkshire and Humber TruckWatch at the RHA Security Seminar, sub-regional launches for TruckWatch in West Yorkshire, North Yorkshire and Humberside are now being set up. This extended coverage provided by a regional TruckWatch scheme means there is a much wider network of members and a greater chance of spotting travelling criminals while they are in the region.

So what is the Government doing?

Freight and lorry theft remains an attractive opportunity to organised crime, as it is still considered to be a low-risk and high-profit option. The Government says it aims to change that view. The Serious Organised Crime Agency (SOCA) has been created specifically to reduce the harm caused to people and communities in the UK by serious organised crime, and its success will be reflected across a range of crimes, including those affecting the haulage industry. The ACPO Vehicle Crime Intelligence Service will also help give a focus to tackling vehicle and vehicle related crime by identifying and spreading good practice and supporting police forces' operational activity.

In support of the work of the agency and law enforcement generally, the Government have introduced radical new powers to deter and disrupt organised criminal gangs including:

- Seizing the profits of criminal activities and redirecting a proportion of them back into law enforcement;
- Imposing conditions on convicted organised criminals post-release, such as tighter restrictions on where they travel and who they associate with; and
- Using incentives such as sentence reductions to encourage criminals to inform on their associates.

The Government is also developing a refreshed crime reduction strategy and looking to the future considering the next set of Public Service Agreement targets. The RHA has already made contributions towards the strategy last year. The indications are that the strategy will have a number of familiar themes:

- The value of partnership working;
- Making it harder for criminals to commit road freight crime in the first place;
- Taking the profit out of the crime, and
- The issue of parking and services.

Truck parking

It is a concern that assaults on drivers appear to be on the increase, as evidenced by the recent publication of preliminary results from the joint survey by the European Conference of Ministers of Transport and the International Road Transport Union and the TruckPol statistics that show a 50 per cent rise in hijacks from 86 in 2005 to 129 in 2006. Violent crime in whatever form it takes is unacceptable and tackling it must be a priority.

The problems currently being experienced are inhibiting the efficient carriage of goods and increasing the risk of these drivers being involved in an accident. The lack of secure facilities also means that drivers and their loads are also at greater risk of crime, as high value loads have to be parked at the roadside; HGVs need to be parked off the highway in a secure location.

A host of security devices are available to deter truck thieves

One of the problems is that there is no money in truck parking and indeed such facilities as do exist continue to close – for example the NightOwl site at Birtley near Newcastle. There is evidence of landowners putting up prices and rents to such a degree to make truck facilities unviable. Perhaps there is a case for local authorities designating land?

Highway authorities should, as part of the Unitary Development Plan and their Local Transport Plan submission, be required to identify and safeguard places where HGVs and coaches may be parked securely during the working day and overnight.

New sites should be developed to security standards agreed by the ACPO/BPA Safer Parking Scheme and existing sites should be encouraged to meet these standards.

In the end, unless central government becomes actively involved and has some control over local authorities, they will continue to close sites and fear that, without an active and leading role, the solutions will again fall into the category of something that is too difficult and 'not my problem', which is where this has lain for far too long.

SUSTAINABILITY DEVELOPMENT – THE NEXT BIG CHALLENGE

John Hutchings,
*Chief Executive,
Cold Storage & Distribution
Federation*

With the recent announcements by both Tesco and Mark & Spencer on sustainable development plans, and the call by Asda for more collaboration between the major retailers, sustainability has really hit the headlines. Add to this the strong environmental messages coming from the government, and particularly the Secretary of State for Defra (the Department for Environment, Food & Rural Affairs), David Miliband. The logistics industry must realise that this is now a major wake-up call to do something proactive and innovative. Sustainable development is the next major business challenge, some say not dissimilar to the calls for added-value services of recent years. Then, the sceptics said, “No way”, but it happened – and those that put the effort in have survived and reaped the benefits.

Before looking at this challenge a little more closely, it is essential to understand what is meant by ‘sustainability’ or ‘sustainable development’. The most widely used definition of sustainable development is from the Brundtland Report of 1987: ‘Development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs’.

Most would interpret this definition as purely covering environmental issues but it is essential not to forget that sustainable development is an all-embracing concept. Social aspects, both for staff and the community, are key, together with economic and business elements. There is no point in being a highly sustainable business if you go bust!

Having established the baseline, what will the pressures for sustainability be, and where will they come from? Recognising that, as a whole, the logistics industry has not been particularly proactive in the past when faced with potentially proactive challenges, it is not unreasonable to say the initial pressures will come from the customer.

Tesco and Mark & Spencer have already set out their stalls; many more household names, both retail and manufacturing, are bound to follow. Logistics companies really need to start thinking about how they will handle some new and fairly revolutionary demands before that letter, e-mail or tender invitation lands on the desk.

For larger companies, one of the keys is to have a senior manager, perhaps a specialist, who has overall responsibility for sustainable development. For SMEs this may not be practical or cost-effective. Nevertheless, you ignore the issues at your peril and therefore need to put it high on your agenda.

Perhaps one of the best places to start is to take a look at Defra’s Food Industry Sustainability Strategy (FISS). Developed jointly by Government and the food industry, the FISS gives a good feel for the way things are going and puts into context the wide scope of sustainable development. Whilst the FISS specifically covers the food industry, much of the content is directly applicable to business as a whole and the logistics sector across the board. The FISS can be downloaded from the Defra website at: www.defra.gov.uk/farm/policy/sustain/fiss/pdf/fiss2006.pdf

Once you have a feel for what it is all about and what the implications might be, you may well need further advice and guidance on developing your overall plan and the direction that best fits your business needs and those of your customers.

The obvious route is to go to one of the plethora of consultants that seem to be springing up as experts on sustainable development issues. No doubt many will be extremely good: they will provide you with sound advice and a plan based on firm business foundations. But beware, there will be the sharks who are just out to fleece you.

Another, and perhaps more ‘sustainable’ route would be for trade associations to develop services to support and advise their members on these important and often complex issues. Your trade association should already have an in depth knowledge of your industry, how it operates, who are the key players and what the business needs are. So they are already well along the road to providing such a service. The added factor needs to be relating the knowledge to sustainable development in general and specific terms.

With the food and drink supply chain, the Cold Storage & Distribution Federation (CSDF) has been developing such an approach as a top priority for over three years. Whilst the CSDF’s main focus is currently the

The logistics industry has had a major wake-up call to ensure its sustainability

The pressures for sustainability are likely to come from the customer temperature-controlled supply chain, in the instance of sustainable development we look at the entire chain, regardless of the temperature regime. This is because, in many instances, the synergies are so similar as to make no practical difference.

How is the CSDF going about developing this vital service? The first and initially most important aspect is to ensure that you are aware of, and able to influence, government thinking and policy development, academic research as well as non-governmental organisation (NGO) views. Consequently, right now, the CSDF is involved with over a dozen committees, working groups and research projects, all of which have a direct link to sustainable development. The further development of specific strategies under Defra's FISS is an over-arching example. Others cover more detailed elements such as energy efficiency, resilience, health and safety, security, food safety, distribution efficiency and even emergency planning.

As part of Defra's Food Industry Sustainability Strategy, industry champions are considering the practical implications of making significant reductions in the level of external costs associated with domestic food transportation. Freight Best Practice's popular Fuel Management Guide

The main point is that trade associations cannot provide a membership service on sustainable development unless they understand the issues. Also, they need to be involved in order that industry's view is heard. NGOs are extremely good at getting their point recognised by government. Perhaps industry is not so adept and trade associations are well placed to fulfil this need. Again, academia provides an excellent research base, but industry expertise and input is essential to ensure practical and workable results.

Having mapped out this course for over three years, the CSDF is now developing information-based services to provide members with the support they need to keep up to speed with sustainable development issues and the advice on how to put them into their own business context. Individual advice is also available to members.

Whether this is the right way for a trade association to go may be open to debate but, with the evidence and business pressures stacking up ever higher to achieved sustainability, the CSDF believes it can play a vital role in helping its members to gain this goal.

BRIDGE STRIKES – HOW THEY CAN BE PREVENTED

Roger King,
*Chief Executive,
Road Haulage Association*

A bridge strike is an incident in which a vehicle, its load or equipment collides with a bridge. Most incidents occur where roads pass under railway bridges, although it is not unknown for bridge strikes to also occur at bridges over public roads carrying footpaths or other roads.

In recent years, the number of bridge strikes reported to Network Rail has shown a steady increase. Since 1996, the number of bridge strikes has almost doubled to exceed 2,000 per year – approximately five each day.

A heavy or light goods vehicle or construction plant was involved in 88 per cent of these bridge strikes.

The consequences of a bridge strike to the railway may vary from paint scrapes on the bridge, to the bridge and track being moved sideways by the collision, with the risk of an oncoming train being derailed. Bridge strikes also cause significant disruption and delay to users of the railways.

Bridge strikes cause substantial costs, disruption, damage and delay to the freight industry. They have resulted in drivers being killed or seriously injured. In some instances, another road user or a member of the public has been fatally injured. All bridge strikes cause damage to the bridge and the road vehicle. Although there may be road signs giving warning of the limit on vehicle height at a low bridge, some bridges are particularly prone to bridge strikes, with Whitehouse Road, Swindon in Wiltshire and Southend Lane (A2218), Lower Sydenham in South London, each being struck 127 times since 1996.

The majority of bridge strikes (78 per cent) occur between 8am and 6pm, with nearly 20 per cent occurring between midday and 2pm.

The causes of bridge strikes recorded by Network Rail include:

- Arch (lorry not in the centre of the road) – 11 per cent;
- Lifting arm left in raised position – 26 per cent;
- Driver did not know the height of his vehicle – 32 per cent.

Good practice guides

To raise awareness of the risk and consequences of bridge strikes, and to provide guidance to prevent bridge strikes occurring, Network Rail, in conjunction with the freight and construction plant transport industry, have produced two good practice guides for use by transport managers and professional drivers, entitled Prevention of Bridge Strikes. The guide for professional drivers has been designed to be inserted in the driver's passport, whilst for freight transport managers, an A5 booklet has been produced.

The guide for freight transport managers provides advice on legal requirements affecting bridge strikes. Every bridge strike is a road traffic collision, and failure to report a bridge strike is an offence.

Advice is also given regarding the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations. For vehicles having an overall travelling height of three metres or above, a notice is required to be displayed in the cab showing the maximum height of the vehicle. For vehicles with high-level equipment capable of exceeding three metres, a visual warning device to inform the driver when the equipment has been left in the extended position is required to be fitted.

Both guides give advice as to the possible consequences of a bridge strike and show that bridge strikes are potentially dangerous and expensive to both vehicle operators and the professional driver.

A good practice guide to preventing bridge strikes can now be added to a professional driver's skills passport

The guide for freight transport managers provides advice on legal requirements

Bridge strikes are dangerous because the lorry driver may be killed or seriously injured, or an incident may cause the death of another driver or member of the public. In all cases of railway bridge strikes, the safety of trains is put at risk. The risk to the professional driver and other road users is the greatest at bridges that cross the road at an angle. At such bridges, when the vehicle is travelling at speed, the top of the vehicle is deflected sideways, causing the vehicle to overturn.

Network Rail will seek to recover costs of each bridge strike incident including:

- The examination of the bridge,
- The cost of any repairs.

Bridge strike incidents could be expensive to freight or construction plant transport operators, as other direct costs for which they may be liable include:

- Vehicle recovery,
- Damage to the vehicle and any damage caused to the load,
- Replacement of damaged road signs.

A professional driver may also suffer serious economic loss, with loss of earnings, overtime or reduced sick pay as a consequence of the bridge strike. In all cases, there is a risk that the professional driver and the company may be liable to prosecution for serious road traffic offences. A company's good reputation may be jeopardised.

The Good Practice Guide for Freight Transport Managers gives advice on the action to be taken prior to a journey to ensure routes are planned in advance and the risk of bridge strike, based on the height and width of the vehicle, its load or equipment, is considered in the selection of the route. Advice is given as to sources of information on bridge locations and limits on vehicle height.

Before a driver starts a journey, the travelling height of the vehicle is required to be measured. It should not be forgotten that the height of both the tractor and the trailer is required to be checked – they may be different. The correct measured height is to be displayed in the cab. The height should be checked again after unloading or reloading, as the trailer suspension characteristics could increase the height of an unloaded vehicle. A route and vehicle check pro forma is provided in the Guide to record route planning and height checks that are carried out prior to the start of a journey.

When a bridge strike is reported, generally Network Rail stops train movements over the bridge until the affected bridge has been examined to determine the extent of any damage. In the majority of incidents the damage is not serious, and therefore, after the examination, trains are permitted to pass over the bridge. In a small percentage of incidents serious damage is caused, which necessitates repair to the bridge structure before trains may be permitted to cross the bridge.

One of the main causes of serious damage to bridges is a lifting arm or other piece of equipment not having been made secure.

The Good Practice Guide for Transport Managers provides advice on management of this risk. Reference is made to the guidance in the Department for Transport's Code of Practice Safety of Loads on Vehicles. Security of load is one of the checks included in the route and vehicle check pro forma.

The Guide for Professional Drivers provides detailed guidance on how to avoid bridge strikes whilst en route. In drafting the guide, it was recognised that bridge strikes may be caused by foreign drivers being confused by imperial and metric road signs. Advice as to the meaning of road signs is provided, and a conversion chart for imperial to metric is included on the rear cover of both guides. Advice is given on the signing that may be found at bridges. For arch bridges, a reminder is included that the extent of the signed limit on vehicle height is only available between the white lines on the road and 'goal posts' on the bridge.

By raising the awareness of the risk and consequences of bridge strikes through publication of these guides, it is intended that a significant number of bridge strikes will be prevented, and that the effects of bridge strikes to both Network Rail and the freight and construction plant transport industry will be reduced.

The guides will be available direct from the participating organisations:

PLANNING AHEAD WITH ONLINE ASSISTANCE

The Highways Agency

introduces a new web resource to help hauliers plan their journeys

England's motorways and trunk roads are the arteries of industry. Each day, thousands of large goods vehicles traverse the country, transporting produce and keeping the economy moving.

Driving a large or heavy goods vehicle requires skill, concentration and experience, with many factors to be taken into account, such as vehicle size, stopping areas, rest facilities and bridge heights. To assist drivers as they carry out their important job of keeping things moving, the Highways Agency has developed a website devoted solely to large and heavy goods drivers, as part of the Department for Transport's programme of road safety initiatives. The driver information microsite, www.heavygoodvehicle.com, was recently launched by Minister for Roads, Dr Stephen Ladyman. The site contains a range of useful information, including how to avoid bridge strikes and driving tips for severe weather. It is available in English, German, French and Polish to cater for the increasing amount of foreign traffic.

Vehicle checks

A professional driver will always make a thorough safety check to ensure the vehicle is safe to drive before setting off on the journey. Failure to carry out this important check could result in heavy fines for the driver and the employer if the vehicle is found to be defective on the road. Any defects found should be reported in writing and appropriate action taken before starting your journey.

Basic checks will take you no more than a few minutes and should start with fuel, oil and water levels, through to cab checks and a walk around the vehicle looking for any defective lights, tyres, wheel fixings, and so on. Operational checks on electrics, steering and brake performance should be carried out before moving off.

It is also the responsibility of the driver to make sure that the vehicle is not overloaded and is completely secure. If you notice that the load you are carrying has moved during the journey, then it is vital that you stop safely and take immediate steps to re-secure the load.

Planning your journey

A key message from the Highways Agency to any road user is to plan the journey ahead of time. This can be even more important for drivers of commercial vehicles, whose incomes rely on delivering the goods.

By using the variety of sources available, drivers can obtain live travel information to help plan their journey. A useful tool is the Highways

Agency's publication Think Ahead Move Ahead. Drivers are encouraged to choose the safest route, rather than the quickest. This hard-copy guide to journey planning is available through the Highways Agency Information Line on Tel: 08457 50 40 30.

Checking weather forecasts with the Met Office online at www.metoffice.gov.uk or by calling Tel: 0870 900 0100 can help to identify any potential or current hazardous road conditions.

Up-to-date information on roadworks or incidents is available at the Highways Agency website at www.highways.gov.uk or by phoning Tel: 08700 660 115. The Agency can also provide important information on the height of bridge crossings.

Bridge strikes

The size of some HGVs can make passing under bridges dangerous. The statistics show that most bridge strikes happen where roads pass under railway bridges. But strikes have been known to happen at pedestrian footbridges or other roads that may involve bridges.

According to Network Rail, the main reason for rail bridge strikes is that the driver is unaware of the height of the vehicle (32 per cent). Strikes also occur when the lorry-mounted crane arm is left in the raised position (26 per cent) or by failure to drive in the centre of the road to allow for an arch (11 per cent).

The Highways Agency has recently launched a website to help hauliers drive safely

it takes practice to be this good.

Experts agree that, without doubt, the best way to protect yourself against a bridge strike is to know the travelling height and width of your vehicle before you start your journey.

For vehicles with an overall height of 3 metres (approx. 9' 10") or above, a notice is required by law to be displayed in the cab showing the maximum height. If you are driving an artic, remember to measure both tractor unit and semi-trailer, as they may be different heights.

Vehicle height should be checked again after unloading or reloading, as suspension characteristics could increase the height of the unloaded vehicle. Consideration also needs to be given to what type of goods are being transported. Once all of this information is known, drivers should plan the route with this in mind, avoiding any bridges that might pose a problem.

The Good Practice Guide for Freight Transport Managers is a practical guide containing absolutely everything you need to know before you start your journey, including bridge locations and limits on vehicle heights. Also included with the guide is a route-planning and height-check proforma to make the whole process as trouble-free as possible.

The Guide for Professional Drivers gives professional advice on how to avoid bridge strikes during the journey. Particularly useful is the advice on the signage found at bridge sites, including the fact that the vehicle height limit indicated is only available when you drive between the white indicator lines on the bridge. The guide includes an imperial-to-metric conversion chart as a complete explanation of all road signs in current use.

Fatigue

Tiredness is one of the biggest killers on the road. The Highway Code recommends that drivers take a break every two hours. This is particularly important for HGV drivers who spend a lot of time on the road. To stop you falling asleep at the wheel you should:

- Include plenty of rest stops when planning your journey: plan to make them every two hours. Don't just drive to rule;
- Try not to start the journey tired; ensure a good rest before driving;
- Be aware if you drive at night you may be at more risk if you did not get a proper sleep during the day;

High winds

High winds can develop at any time of the year and without much warning. It is important to check weather reports before and during the driving period.

Although important for all drivers, this is particularly important for HGV drivers. Proper planning to avoid areas susceptible to high winds such as high-level bridges, exposed viaducts or open stretches of road can help to mitigate the risk.

If exposed to high wind conditions, reduce speed and always take on board advance warnings and avoid dangerous conditions as far as possible. If in doubt, park up safely and make your employer aware of the circumstances.

There is also an ongoing debate as to whether empty curtainsiders should be driven with the curtains open or closed. If you choose to tie them back make sure they are tied securely preventing them from coming loose and flapping during high winds. This can cause a potential hazard to other road users.

For more useful information relating to large or heavy goods vehicles on England's motorways and trunk roads, visit: www.heavygoodvehicle.com

Overtaking

HGV vehicles are fitted with a speed limiter, preventing it from travelling any faster than 56mph (96kph). This means that if two trucks are passing, both operating their limiters, the entire manoeuvre can take approximately four and a half minutes. This may infuriate other road users and can lead to further congestion or even accidents. It is best for drivers to be more responsive to the situation by dropping the cruise control when other truck drivers need to pass and be more responsive to the situation.

Sideswiping

With more and more left-hand-drive vehicles on our roads, sideswiping is becoming something of an issue despite additional curbside mirrors. Be aware by being extra vigilant and signalling well in advance of your manoeuvre. This allows any unseen vehicles to move into view.

VEHICLE WEIGHING

Eugene O'Brien,
*Director, Institute for Sustainable Development,
University College Dublin*

Technologies for weighing trucks in motion – Weigh-in-Motion or WIM – have been around for many years. Many different approaches have been tried – load cells, capacitive, piezo-electric, piezo-ceramic and piezo-quartz strips, bending plates and instrumented bridges. Sensors and systems have now come a long way from the early days, when road authorities complained about poor accuracy and even poorer durability.

Application areas are also growing. Techniques for applying WIM data – such as for bridge assessment – are maturing and becoming better established and new application areas are emerging. For example, direct enforcement of overload now, finally, seems possible.

At the recent WIM conference in Taiwan, a number of new technological developments were reported – including a new WIM sensor – as well as improvements in existing technologies. There have also been significant developments in existing applications of WIM data and there are important new applications. Integration was a common theme – WIM systems are in many cases being integrated into wider networks of intelligent transport.

There have been many technological developments in WIM in recent years. A new multiple-sensor WIM site is operational in the Netherlands (see Figure 1.). It is planned to use this for high-quality pre-selection for overload enforcement in the short term, and for direct enforcement long term. An instrumented vehicle is operational and capable of calibrating the system for dynamic as well as static forces. There are also plans for multiple-sensor sites in France.

Simulation studies have been used to calculate the optimal number of sensors at these sites and the best spacing between them. New algorithms have been developed for processing the output from multiple sensors.

Multiple-sensor weigh-in-motion site in the Netherlands

Results to date would appear to be little better than a simple averaging of the sensor outputs. However, there is a need for further testing with field data and there is potential for significant improvement through further development of the concepts.

One of the most significant recent technological developments is the new 'Integrated Matrix' WIM sensor concept, based on strain gauge technology being developed in Germany. In contrast to the conventional bending plate, this sensor strip consists of 16 individual shear deformation elements. This has very small deflection under load and is made from stainless steel, both of which are factors that should be good for durability. A modular system is proposed to facilitate easy maintenance and replacement. A prototype is in existence but it seems likely to be some time before the new system comes into mainstream production.

In another technological development, a series of tests of edge effects in two piezoceramic sensors was carried out recently at the Laboratoire Central des Ponts et Chaussées in Paris. This has demonstrated bending as well as direct bearing pressure effects in such sensors and proposed a simple formula to correct errors caused by this effect when vehicles travel close to the edge of sensors.

Bridge WIM continues to develop. There is now extensive application of commercial Bridge WIM systems in a number of countries. There is considerable field experience and a significant number of installations are achieving Class A(5) accuracy. This implies that about 95 per cent of Gross Vehicle Weights are within 5 per cent of the corresponding static value.

In most cases, Bridge WIM is currently used as a portable system. However, one system has been in place for three months now and there would appear to be no reason why permanent Bridge WIM installations may not be used in the future. In Sweden, Bridge WIM trials have been carried out on a railway bridge. While good accuracy is reported, it is not clear what the benefits are of instrumenting a bridge when instrumentation of individual rails would be likely to give excellent results.

Overload enforcement

The enforcement of overloaded trucks and axles is a major issue. Company profiling, where freight companies whose drivers are consistently violating legal limits are contacted to discuss the issue, was first reported from the Netherlands in 2002. This approach is now working well and has been adopted in other countries with good success.

There is now extensive application of WIM for pre-selection worldwide – WIM systems are used to identify the overloaded trucks and the message is relayed downstream to police at a static weigh station. There are increasingly sophisticated communications between the pre-selection scales and the enforcement authorities. Plans are well advanced for fully automatic overload enforcement, particularly in the Netherlands, where WIM experts are working closely with the metrological and enforcement authorities.

At the present time, accurate pre-selection is seen, both in the Netherlands and France, as an intermediate stage on a path leading to fully automatic enforcement in the medium term. It is not clear yet what level of accuracy will be required for automatic enforcement. It has been suggested that Class A(5) would be sufficient. However, it remains to be seen if this will be acceptable to metrological authorities.

Fully automatic overload enforcement has been achieved nearly ten years ago in Taiwan but this was with a tolerance margin of 20 per cent.

An eight-axle calibration truck is nearly at the stage when it may be approved by the Dutch Metrological Institute. This is fully instrumented and has known dynamic as well as static forces. Hence, any calibration bias due to its pattern of spatial repeatability can be removed to give an improved calibration over what would be achieved with one statically weighed truck alone.

The recently completed European Commission REMOVE project is a first step towards a harmonised pan-European approach to overload enforcement. The partnership included police authorities and the emphasis was not on the technical issues but rather on the legal and enforcement issues associated with the problem. This seems likely to be the start of a new era in the automatic enforcement of overload using WIM technology.

Other applications of Weigh-in-Motion

There are significant advances in the traditional application areas of WIM data: bridge and pavement design and assessment. Bridge load assessment is achieving some degree of maturity with new simplified methods of traffic load assessment for road bridges suitable for use by non-specialists. Some work has also been done in Sweden on the assessment of railway bridges. It is now generally agreed that results are quite sensitive to sensor accuracy and it seems likely that calculated characteristic load effects using two to four weeks of data, as has been suggested in the past, are unreliable.

The American adoption of axle load spectra for pavement design instead of the traditional equivalent standard axles, has resulted in a significant increase in the demand for WIM data. This will result in increased data collection costs but must surely lead to savings in the long term due to improved accuracy in pavement design calculations.

It is generally agreed that Railway WIM is technically less challenging than Road WIM as the vehicles are less varied and their transverse position is fixed. Furthermore, the rail lends itself to instrumentation with strain sensing devices. Fibre optic sensors have also been used and have the advantage of being insensitive to induced currents from electric trains. The accuracy of railway WIM appears to be good although there were no reports of independent tests. Excellent results have been reported of using WIM sensors to detect "wheel flats". This lack of roundness of wheels is a considerable source of damage to rail track and, with an integrated system throughout the Netherlands, considerable savings in maintenance costs have been found. There are plans to count passengers using WIM sensors in the future. This is a difficult challenge as the total weight of passengers is a relatively small percentage of the gross weight of the train.

Aeroplane WIM is well known as a concept but there is no reported application to date. While most aircraft have on-board weighing capability, there is still a lack of knowledge about the distribution of load applied to the pavement in the airport taxiways.

The next conference on Weigh-in-Motion is in Paris in May 2008. Details of this and past WIM conferences can be found at: <http://hvp.paris2008.free.fr>

SAVING FUEL AND TYRES FOR 25 YEARS

Lasalign, wheel alignment specialists for HGVs and PSVs, have been established since 1978 and recently celebrated their 25th anniversary.

Throughout this time, the company have established a long relationship with their valued customers.

Their aim as a company is to ensure optimum tyre wear and fuel savings, via correct wheel alignment.

The company offer a nationwide mobile service, with a team of over 16 highly trained and dedicated engineers, using the latest laser equipment.

Their motto is: NO PROBLEM – NO CHARGE (i.e. if we cannot save you money – we will not charge you!)

They also have a static workshop, in Kilsby – off junction 18 of the M1 – where they operate a drop-in service. The workshop can offer:

- King pin replacement to rear steer axles
- Camber changes to beam axles in situ
- Straightening of damaged axles in situ
- On-vehicle wheel balancing
- Brake calliper refurbishment

The company offer fleet discounts and are more than happy to give a free demonstration as to the benefits of correct wheel alignment.

If tyres are flat, profits soon follow.

The ROR tyre inflation system keeps both inflated.

A deflated tyre means deflated profits. It is as simple as that. But not with the new ROR Tyre Inflation System by PSI. By utilising surplus tractor supplied air, all trailer tyres are automatically maintained at optimum pressure. Performance improves all round, increasing on-time delivery and reducing downtime. You save money without even trying. There is longer tyre life and improved fuel economy. Costs per km of running your trailer are dramatically decreased giving a typical payback on the system's cost within 12 months. Not to mention the increased safety by avoiding tyre blowout.

The system can be retro-fitted to existing trailers. But best of all the tyre inflation system can be factory fitted with any ROR axle. It arrives certified, drilled and fitted for simple installation to the trailer. So you can have one system – axles, brakes, suspension and tyre inflation – from one supplier, with one warranty. Yet another example of the new ROR driving down operator costs.

No wonder many of the largest trailer manufacturers are offering our complete system across the entire range of their trailers.

ROR, making life simple.

TRUCK TYRES – DISTRESS PURCHASE OR VITAL SAFETY COMPONENT?

Christopher Wakley, TyreSafe (incorporating the Tyre Industry Council)

The importance of tyres on vehicles can sometimes be overlooked and yet they are arguably the most important safety-related component on a commercial vehicle. There is also evidence from roadside tyre checks undertaken by the police with support from TyreSafe that vehicle operators are trying to cut corners and save money when specifying tyres. And yet this is a false economy and may well bring the driver and operator into conflict with the law enforcement agencies.

Industry challenges

As a backdrop to tyre safety, the truck tyre industry, according to Continental Tyres, has experienced a particularly challenging period Europe-wide, brought on by falling truck registrations, which has had a consequent knock-on effect on the number of original equipment fitments.

With the replacement truck tyre market forecast to be two per cent lower in 2006 compared to last year, the UK industry faces the additional challenge of operators putting in place stricter controls to cut tyre and operating costs. They are therefore demanding a higher level of performance from tyres, particularly in the premium sector, which now represents the largest segment of the market. As a result, this may encourage some to turn towards the less expensive brands from outside Europe (which has driven down prices and margins for budget tyres), but in the long run, operators may struggle to achieve substantial savings.

This is equally reflected by the bullish forecast which points to a continued growth in the premium market which, coupled with the increasing quality of budget tyres, threatens the future of the quality sector which accounts for nearly 20 per cent of the tyre replacement market.

Changes in market

Steer tyres continue to be most popular selection amongst operators in the UK as opposed to drive and trailer, and account for half of the market thanks to the growth in multi-axle vehicles. The drive tyre is however gradually increasing its market share at the cost of the steer tyre, despite the use of remoulds usually being higher for drive axles.

European legislation continues to have an impact on the truck tyre industry as Euro 4 emissions have brought increased vehicle weight. This has reaffirmed the role of tyre manufacturers as a source of weight-saving solutions. At a government level, mounting charges in a bid to reduce traffic is not expected to lead to a major shift in maximum gross vehicle weight, but it is however thought that work rates for vehicles will increase.

Premium operators are demanding a higher level of performance from tyres

The ongoing concerns surrounding high levels of carbon emissions and the drive for more economical fuel consumption together with the reduction in the number of vehicle accidents, have all become key factors in the design and fabrication processes used by the truck tyre industry. Many tyre manufacturers are investing heavily in major technological developments in these areas to help meet the needs of truck and fleet operators.

Choosing the right tyre

Making the correct tyre choice is absolutely critical for the transport or haulage operator to enable them to determine the best-suited tyre in order to achieve optimum efficiency, performance and value for money.

As an example, the long-distance tyre, which sits at the end of the spectrum of tyre choice, combines fuel savings for extended runs on motorways, which in turn promotes quiet running, increased traction and even wear. Urban tyres, on the other hand, combine high mileage and low-running road noise, which also combines with relatively low wear rates.

The regional traffic tyre acts as a compromise between the long-distance and the urban tyre, providing an ideal compound for either long or short haulage. All operators should of course discuss all these issues of tyre choice and use with their tyre retailer.

Introducing TyreSafe

TyreSafe, formerly the Tyre Industry Council, is supported by all major tyre companies and key retailers with the objective of providing tyre safety advice across the board to truck operators and driver alike. TyreSafe has created a new website www.tyresafe.org which will contain truck, bus, coach and van tyre safety information progressively over the coming year.

INSURING FOR FREIGHT TRANSPORT

Peter J Staddon,
*Head of Technical Services,
British Insurance Brokers' Association*

When searching for advice about the insurances relevant to freight transport industry, it is important to effectively assess the information and advice that you receive. It will soon become quite evident if you have found an insurance professional who understands the diverse activities of the freight transport industry and the insurances required.

Good advice can save you considerable amounts of time and money. In addition to the standard insurance covers such as motor, goods-in-transit, storage, public liability, employers liability, and commercial property, you should expect your insurance providers to discuss your activities in full, commenting on your potential liabilities and exposures, as well as what insurances are available to address these exposures.

Goods in transit

Goods-in-transit insurance is not as straightforward as it might seem. Your insurers must understand what you are carrying and for whom. It is important that your insurer understands what conditions of carriage/storage you have incorporated with your customers, and to what international conventions you may be exposed. This will enable them to arrange effective insurance in respect of your liability for loss or damage of third-party property.

An insurance broker that specialises in your trade sector will ensure that you are aware of the implications of not incorporating conditions of carriage/storage with your customers. Failure to incorporate your conditions of carriage/storage could financially expose you to the actual value of the property rather than the financial limits contained in your condition of carriage/storage. It is possible to extend your insurance policy to include non-incorporation of contract conditions. This extension will provide you with indemnity as per your liability at common law, to the limit specified in the insurance policy. You must be able to demonstrate that it is your normal practice and procedure to incorporate conditions of carriage/storage, and that failure to do so has been an error or omission on your behalf.

Review your goods in transit/storage insurance policy limit in respect of any one event/loss, is it adequate? It is quite common to see policy limits of £250,000, however for a multi-vehicle operator such a limit may well require a significant uplift to reflect your true exposure. For example – should you have a number of loaded vehicles or trailers in your yard at a weekend, and items in store, and suffer a total loss such as an arson attack, the total value of the property could be substantial. The class of traffic in which you are involved is also very important. If you are carrying bulk agricultural produce you would generally have a modest load value, whereas if you are involved in container traffic you may well be exposed to very high value loads such as bottled spirits, computer equipment or expensive footwear. In this instance, you would have the need for higher policy limits in respect of any one loss/event.

Hazardous goods

If a road traffic accident occurs, resulting in pollution or contamination caused by the spillage of hazardous goods, the motor insurers will be asked to provide indemnity. It is very important that the motor insurers are fully aware of the carriage of hazardous goods or dangerous property and that they are providing an adequate third-party property damage limit.

Tony Gardiner, Director of Davis Corporate Risks explains: "Many insurers will restrict their third-party property damage limits. Some insurers limits are as low as £250,000 but a limit of £1 million is generally applied in respect of incidents attributable to the carriage of hazardous/dangerous goods." It is, however, possible to buy an excess layer motor third-party property damage insurance for, for example £4 million, in excess of the primary £1 million that the motor insurer provides.

Plant attachments

You should also closely look at any plant attachments on vehicles, such as cranes and lifting platforms etc. An insurer may exclude within their standard motor policy any accidental damage cover for such equipment while being used as a tool of the trade. Such restrictions must be fully explained to you, and your broker should point out those insurance policies that are available that do provide such cover.

Trailers

Trailer cover is also a very important aspect of your insurance, as the extent of cover does vary from insurer to insurer – particularly in respect of trailers while detached. It is common practice for commercial vehicle insurers to restrict detached cover, whilst remaining within the insured's secured premises. Although policies are available, providing wider detached cover, the majority of insurers exclude thefts from non-secure premises such as lay-bys and car parks etc.

Disclosing material facts

It is important that your broker highlights the necessity to disclose material facts, both at inception of the policy, during the policy terms and at renewal. A good example of this is motor convictions that have been incurred after placing the policy. Renewal terms may be offered without taking into account any additional motoring convictions. If you, as the insured, do not consider yourself to be an insurance expert, you may not realise the necessity to disclose any additional convictions.

Motor Insurers Database

Despite the insurers and brokers promoting awareness of the Motor Insurers Database (MID), it is not uncommon for prospective customers to state that they are unaware of its existence and the requirements imposed upon them. It is important to discuss prior to placing the insurance, how data is to be transferred to the MID, by offering you, as a prospective insured, options and highlighting what is required of you.

Travelling abroad

When you are travelling outside the UK, you should be aware that the extent of cover provided may vary. Some policies restrict the extent of cover to the minimum compulsory requirement within the European Union country being visited unless prior notification is made. It is important to point out that, although your certificate of insurance will state that cover applies within countries required to comply with the EU Motor Insurance Directive, you may not have accidental damage, fire and theft cover unless you have notified your insurers who, in turn, may wish to charge an appropriate premium for the travel and exposure.

In-cab electronic equipment

Many HGVs may have laptops or satellite navigation equipment in their cabs. Do not assume that your motor insurance will automatically provide cover for such equipment. Generally, such items will be excluded, unless they are permanently fitted to the vehicle as a standard accessory. Cover can be provided for drivers' personal effects as an extension under many goods-in-transit policies.

Acts of terrorism

Acts of terrorism, war, civil unrest, riot or similar events hit the headlines every day. Look very carefully at your motor insurance policy, as the insurer may exclude cover for such consequences, except where such liability is required to be covered by the Road Traffic Acts. Those insurers that do provide cover for your equipment in respect of terrorism and similar risks may financially limit any claim (often limits of £100,000 are usual). Also ask your insurance broker to explain what exclusions or limitations apply to your non-motor insurances in respect of terrorism and related incidents.

The array of insurance requirements and products on offer can be daunting; however a good knowledgeable broker can guide you through. They will be able to explain the various options and highlight which covers will be most appropriate for you.

ESDAL – IMPROVING THE PLANNING OF ABNORMAL LOADS

A free website has been launched that significantly improves life for anyone planning to make an abnormal load movement – www.highways.gov.uk/esdal. ESDAL stands for Electronic Service Delivery for Abnormal Loads. The site, which has been developed for the Highways Agency by Serco Integrated Transport, has many benefits for hauliers, as well as helping the police, local authorities and other structure owners.

Currently, the operator of any vehicle and load that exceeds 2.9 metres wide, 18.65 metres long or 44 tonnes in gross weight has to send a multitude of faxes to police, road authorities and bridge owners. This task is getting more difficult every day, because of the large numbers of infrastructure owners, the increase in the number of managing agents, and the frequently changing boundaries of highway authorities.

Almost two million faxes are sent every year and the effort required to check that each proposed movement does not represent a safety risk is huge.

But an end to the logistical complexity is in sight. ESDAL streamlines the planning and notification of abnormal load movements.

Up and running!

Since the launch of the site in March 2006, hauliers have been sketching out their proposed routes using the innovative on-line mapping system. Once they have done this, ESDAL tells them which areas of responsibility they have passed through, and provides a detailed, up-to-date list of the people they need to notify.

All a haulier needs is a PC with an Internet connection. There is no need for specialist software and there are no complicated processes to learn. The clear on-screen instructions mean that anyone planning a move can make a quick enquiry using ESDAL, and be confident they are notifying the right people. Hauliers can even save the routes they use regularly to further speed up the process of checking contact details.

There is no charge to use ESDAL. Bidding for major movements is a competitive market, so ESDAL is employing the latest information security methods so hauliers can be confident any commercially sensitive information stays private. To make this happen, hauliers will need to register to use ESDAL. If you have not received a registration form through the post, then make sure you visit the website to register.

More to come

This is just the beginning. Later phases of ESDAL will enable hauliers to make notifications through the website itself – removing the need to send faxes.

A huge data collection exercise involved finding every road-bearing and road-crossing bridge in the UK. This information provides the backbone of the later phases of ESDAL, ensuring that notifications only go to those organisations whose bridges are crossed by a proposed movement, cutting down on the huge number of unnecessary notifications that are sent every year.

Final agreement for a route rests with the structure owner, and the arrival of ESDAL will not change responsibilities or legislation. However, hauliers using ESDAL in its later phases will receive an indication of whether their route is likely to be given the nod by the structure owner. Routes that are judged unlikely to be agreed can be re-submitted without extra time being spent waiting for a response.

In this way, hauliers can also be guided towards using 'approved grids' – routes which the authorities are comfortable can take heavy or high loads. This benefits everyone by cutting down on the amount of time required to agree an abnormal load movement.

The Highways Agency has revised the High and Heavy Load Grids, which is a collection of advisory routes suitable especially for transporting the highest and heaviest of abnormal loads. The set of routes and a map have now been published on www.esdal.com, the website which carries information to help anyone planning to move an abnormal load.

Using the High and Heavy Load Grids will both save planning time for hauliers and inform structure-owning authorities of the required abnormal load capacities on the routes. The Grids do not represent permission to move and hauliers must follow the notification procedures as laid out in legislation.

The up-to-date and regularly reviewed information will help hauliers of abnormal loads, manufacturing and electrical industries as well as highway and police authorities plan how to move loads and carry out their businesses safely and effectively.

The Highways Agency will continue to update the High and Heavy Load Grids with new suggestions from hauliers, consigners and other interested parties to increase the robustness of the network.

How to register for ESDAL

Hauliers need to complete an ESDAL registration form, which can be downloaded from the website at www.highways.gov.uk/esdal

Alternatively, you can e-mail your request for forms, which will be posted to you. Just send your company name and address to: register@esdal.com

Hauliers seeking further information to arrange movements of abnormal loads can visit: www.esdal.com/public/hauliers/abguide1.html.

For specific queries about making a special order movement, contact the Highways Agency Abnormal Loads Team, C6, 5 Broadway, Broad Street, Birmingham B15 1BL on Tel: 0121 678 8192, Fax: 0121 678 8569, e-mail: abnormal.loads@highways.gsi.gov.uk or visit: www.highways.gov.uk/esdal

GETTING THE MOST FROM YOUR STORE – SAFELY

The articulated truck concept has enjoyed considerable success in recent years, as its ability to eliminate the need to operate a two-truck system – with a counterbalanced machine working outside, feeding a reach truck inside the store or warehouse – has won converts among 3PLs, retailers and manufacturers alike. As many truck users have discovered that, by cutting double handling, the switch to a predominantly articulated forklift fleet makes financial savings of up to 50 per cent a very real possibility.

Optimum aisle width

But the articulated advantage doesn't stop there. For instance, articulated forklift pioneer Narrow Aisle's latest model – the G4 – is capable of working in aisles as narrow as 1642mm wide at sites where Euro pallets are stored, or 1762mm wide at facilities which use standard UK pallets. This is the optimum aisle width for operator safety outlined in the British Industrial Truck Association's Guidance Note 9 (BITA GN9). The reduction in aisle widths means the Flexi can create up to 30 per cent more storage capacity in any warehouse in comparison to a conventional reach truck.

"The Flexi eliminates the space needed by a reach or counterbalance truck to turn into a pallet position. This means that within any storage space, aisle widths can be reduced and more racking bays introduced," explains John Maguire, Sales and Marketing Director of Narrow Aisle.

Narrow Aisle's new Flexi G4

However, while the benefits of condensing storage aisles to their minimum width are obvious, John Maguire is quick to stress that successful warehousing has to strike a balance between productivity and safety.

Safety first

"Articulated trucks are now capable of lifting pallets to tremendous heights, and while there is always a temptation to condense aisleways to the narrowest possible width, safety has to be the foremost consideration with any new warehouse scheme," he says.

"That is why we always recommend that, for applications where standard UK pallets are being used, aisle widths must be at least 1762mm wide to conform with BITA GN9. This is still considerably less than the space that a reach truck requires to operate, but it does not compromise safety."

BITA's GN9 is certainly something of which John Maguire believes warehouse designers should be aware when specifying trucks or designing their storage space.

He explains why: "Back in 1999, BITA introduced Guidance Note 9 – a guide that allowed the minimum aisle width to be quickly and easily determined based on the type and combination of fork trucks being used.

"GN9 has been adopted by all of the main forklift truck suppliers as the most straightforward and reliable method of configuring warehouse design and today the document is regularly consulted throughout the warehouse planning process.

Historically, the guidance laid down in GN9 has been endorsed for sites where traditional counterbalanced and reach trucks are in operation but, for facilities where articulated forklift trucks are working, the rules of GN9 have not always been applied.

"In simple terms, GN9 outlines the ideal aisle width where a truck and a pallet can turn safely. For reach trucks, this measurement has always been calculated on the assumption that the pallet is at ground level when it is picked up and turned at 90 degrees in the aisleway before the load is raised.

"Because articulated forklift trucks enter an aisle with the palletised load to the front (like a traditional counterbalanced machine) then articulate before turning the pallet through 90 degrees to put it away, they are able to operate in aisles far narrower than conventional reach and counterbalanced trucks. However, in some instances, exaggerated claims are being made about the 'narrowness' of the aisles in which articulated trucks can work.

"The most important dimensions when assessing the ideal aisle width for any operation involving articulated trucks, to conform to GN9, is the distance diagonally across the pallet, i.e. from one corner to another when a pallet is being rotated in the aisle. Safety clearance of 100mm either side (200mm in total) of a typical pallet will need to be added to ensure safe pallet put-away and retrieval.

"By not considering the safety clearance requirement laid down in GN9, companies may be compromising safety in their search for the most space-efficient aisle widths."

The Flexi G4

At this year's International Materials Handling Exhibition, Narrow Aisle's recently introduced G4 version of the Flexi was highlighted. The G4 is an electric-powered truck and boasts all of the design features that have established the Flexi as Europe's biggest selling articulated forklift. It also includes a number of significant advances that are proving attractive to operators and specifiers alike. For example, with the growth in high-bay warehouse development, the average lift height of the Flexi has increased by 50 per cent over the last three years. To ensure that the Flexi continues to meet the highest standards of lift stability, the G4's articulation unit itself has been upgraded, with an integrated rack and pinion hydraulic steering mechanism for smooth, controlled stacking, even at the highest pallet levels.

"We believe the G4 sets a new benchmark in the ongoing struggle to maximise storage capacity," says John Maguire. "But, importantly, it does not compromise safety."

Narrow Aisle manufactures and markets the award-winning Flexi range of articulated forklift trucks together with a series of VNA (very narrow aisle) products, which includes man-down and man-up trucks, order pickers and specialist heavy-duty reach trucks.

PERFECT CONDITIONS

Roger Williams,
*Chief Executive Officer,
United Kingdom Warehousing
Association*

It is important to have clearly defined industry terms and conditions. Standard industry terms and conditions are principally a mechanism to regularise the commercial relationship between the supplier of a product or service and the supplier's customer.

For a service provider, using standard terms is a cost-effective way of protecting your position, especially when dealing with numerous customers. However, standard terms can only perform their function if they are effectively incorporated into the contract between the parties.

Warehouse operators, hauliers and other logistics service providers need to ensure that the customer (and the owner of the goods, if not the same person) understands and agrees that the contractual relationship will be on the operator's terms. Seeking to rely on terms, only to find that they have never become part of the contract is an easy situation to find oneself in, especially when handling goods that are owned by someone other than your customer.

It is always best to have your standard terms and conditions incorporated in writing, as proving that they have been agreed orally is not always straightforward.

Many companies in the warehousing and haulage sectors use the United Kingdom Warehousing Association's (UKWA) Conditions of Contract as the basis for their standard terms and conditions. UKWA – which represents over 650 third-party logistics services providers – recently revised its Conditions of Contract and the new document covers a broad range of services such as freight forwarding, haulage and, of course, warehousing.

*UKWA's revised Conditions of Contract
now covers freight
forwarding and haulage
as well as warehousing*

Traditionally, member companies have had to prepare three different contracts to encompass these distinct areas of their business. Now, for the first time, one document is sufficient.

We feel that, because hauliers are increasingly offering to store goods for their customers, UKWA's updated Conditions of Contract will be particularly welcomed by those companies that provide haulage and/or freight forwarding services in addition to straightforward warehousing facilities.

It is important that hauliers who are looking to add warehousing services to their service portfolio have some form of storage contract in place as, surprisingly, goods held in a warehouse face a much wider range of potential causes of damage than goods in transit. Once in the warehouse, careless handling – whether manual or by forklift truck, damp, fire, pest or even the proximity of other goods which have the ability to contaminate products stored nearby, are all potential causes of product damage. The value of goods stored may be high and, unless the warehouse keeper has dealt with the issue of value in a storage contract, he may be liable for the full value of the goods in the event of a disaster. It is, therefore, important that within all contracts the responsibilities of the customer and the logistics service provider are made clear.

Warehouse operators, hauliers and other logistics services need to ensure that the customer understands and agrees that the contractual relationship will be on the operator's terms

Because of the comprehensive nature of UKWA's Conditions of Contract, companies that provide a full range of logistics-based functions now have the peace of mind of knowing that their Conditions of Contract cover all of the services that they offer.

Very often hauliers, warehouse operators and freight forwarders quote more than one set of terms when dealing with customers. They may, for example, have separate storage terms and haulage terms. If a problem arises – say, a dropped pallet in the yard – it is sometimes not clear which set of conditions applies to that situation, and sometimes the legal position may be that none do. By using UKWA's Conditions of Contract, operators and their clients know exactly where they stand.

UKWA's new Conditions of Contract have been submitted to the Office of Fair Trading and are recommended by insurers. Use of the Conditions is strictly restricted to UKWA member companies only.

With over 600 member companies, the United Kingdom Warehousing Association (UKWA) is the UK's only trade association dedicated to serving the vitally important warehousing and logistics sector. Established in 1944, the Association's members control nearly 100 million square feet of warehousing space from nearly 1,300 locations across the UK. Although originally established as a trade body for the third party warehousing sector, the Association now embraces all companies that operate a warehousing or distribution facility. Membership is not restricted to those companies based within the borders of the United Kingdom.

A SHIPPING VIEW ON PORTS

Jeremy Harrison,
*Head of Communications,
Chamber of Shipping*

Ninety-five per cent of the UK's international trade is carried in ships, and a quarter of our domestic trade also moves by sea. All of that is loaded and discharged at UK ports. Any restraint on ports, on port capacity, or on port operations is a restraint on the UK's economic growth and on our national prosperity.

A healthy and efficient UK ports industry is thus in our national interest and the Government's existing policy – with its market-led approach – has largely succeeded in delivering this. Looking ahead however, there are serious doubts that that success can continue.

Government policies are placing ever more limitations on the ability of ports to operate freely. Those limitations cause concern about future port capacity (both deep-sea and short-sea); about how competing Government priorities for the economy and the environment are to be balanced in the national interest; and about the maintenance of competition to secure a healthy operating climate for the long term.

The Government's Ports Policy Review (still awaited at time of writing) is of great importance because it offers an opportunity to examine the causes of these concerns – and to address the challenges facing UK ports as they endeavour to meet their customers' demands. It offers the opportunity to reassess – consensually – the key assumptions underlying our national policy.

Capacity and planning

Changes to the planning system need to be at the heart of any reformulation. The current system, far from facilitating the provision of new port capacity, acts as an effective restraint on it. It is slow, complex, costly and inconsistent – and it contains an inbuilt presumption against new port developments.

A healthy and efficient UK ports industry is in our national interest

Choice of port is often predetermined

The most conspicuous feature of the planning system is the excessive time taken to respond to applications. The infamous blocking of the Dabden Bay application, after some three and a half years, continues to cast a shadow over the industry. Four years after the application for a new container terminal at London Gateway was submitted, a final decision is still awaited. We welcome the Department's recent 'catching up' with the approvals for terminals at Harwich, Felixstowe and Hull, but the delays remain excessive.

Public interest – economic and environmental

The in-built presumption (thanks to the EU Habitats Directive) against any development where an adverse environmental impact is expected needs to be reconsidered. Given the nature of port developments, such impacts can be expected in every case! Government needs to reassess its basic assumptions as to what is in the public interest and to rebalance them in favour of providing the necessary infrastructure on which the national economy depends.

However, the real improvements that are necessary in the performance of the planning system will only be achieved by fundamental changes to the system itself – to ensure that it facilitates, rather than obstructs, the provision of port infrastructure.

Securing a similar amendment to EU law will also take time. The most important first step would be to establish, as a point of policy on which everyone involved can rely, that the existence of sufficient port capacity to handle the forecast growth in cargo traffic is a matter of public interest able to override other concerns.

Location, location

Somewhat surprisingly, 2006 saw considerable debate about whether port development should be favoured in some parts of the UK over others. The question supposes that maritime traffic is susceptible to being induced to divert to ports in different regions of the UK from those it currently uses.

However, in some trades, the choice of ports is predetermined. Eighty per cent of the cargo on deep-sea container vessels on Far East trades is bound for Continental Europe. The South East of England is on the direct course to the Antwerp/Rotterdam/Hamburg range. The rest of the UK is not.

Other trades – trans-Atlantic traffic, dry bulks, short-sea containers – are more mobile. Even so, choice exists only insofar as it fits with the customers' demands for the cargo to be delivered to or collected from a particular place. The ultimate determinant is where the customer wants the cargo.

Given the market-led nature of the UK shipping and ports industries, it is safe to assume that, where local demand exists, schemes will be developed to meet it. Ports policy needs to accommodate such schemes as are put forward, but the recommendation, in the recent Transport Committee report on the ports industry, that there should be a national plan for freight diversion across the UK would be a negative step that would not succeed in promoting port development in particular regions.

This is not to say that there is no scope for port development outside the South East of England. There is real potential in several sectors, not least in feeder containers. Rising traffic volumes are likely to support coastal services.

Essential infrastructure

Coastal shipping will not, however, obviate the need for ports to have adequate road and rail links.

Current policy places ports and shipping at a disadvantage. It requires promoters of a port development to fund the provision of connections to the main road and railway network and to contribute to the cost of any upgrading of the networks that is necessary to handle additional traffic generated by the development.

The national transport networks, as public infrastructure that is open to all users, should be funded by Government and provided, across the country, to meet demand. The review offers Government an opportunity to reassess the borders of what should be considered part of the national infrastructure network and the principles governing funding sought from private parties for the additional links necessary to connect to ports.

Coastal shipping will not obviate the need for ports to have adequate road and rail links

The Government's Ports Policy Review offers an opportunity to examine the conflicting concerns over competitiveness, capacity and the environment

Short-sea dilemma

If the limitations of their road and rail connections restrain the development of some ports, environmental restrictions also pose a threat to their existing operations. Limits have been imposed on operating hours in order to reduce noise. Consent to maintain dredged channels has been withheld in order to avoid damage to marine habitats. Now it appears that further restrictions may be in prospect on air pollution grounds.

In short-sea trades too, capacity is being constrained by the closing of wharves. Environmental restrictions and regulatory costs are undermining their viability and, in some cases, public money is even being used to buy out working wharf operations and pay for the redevelopment of the sites for housing.

The threat is greatest for small wharves, which are unable to take advantage of economies of scale to absorb the costs. Yet these same wharves fulfil an essential role in relation to short-sea shipping, and their closure is displacing cargo on to urban roads. There is thus a real prospect that restrictions imposed to address particular environmental concerns may cause damage to the wider environment. To mangle a green analogy, current policy has lost sight of the wood for the trees.

Consent to maintain dredged channels has been withheld

There is a particular need for wharves to be protected against complaints about noise, where the redevelopment of riverside plots for high-cost housing has introduced new neighbours who are unsympathetic to port activity, particularly at night. Planning guidance that residential units should not be built close to sources of industrial noise (like ports) is clearly not being heeded. It needs to be enforced and established wharves should be given statutory immunity from noise complaints from their new neighbours.

Competition

One consequence of the current shortage of capacity at some ports is that shipowners in some trades, notably deep-sea containers, are less able to take their business to a competing port if they are dissatisfied with the service provided at the port they are using. The ability to shop around between ports is now largely confined to short-sea container and trailer services and to dry bulk trades.

There are concerns that this reduction in competition has led to rises in port dues, which in some instances have been excessive. While limited protection exists, in theory, with the right of appeal to the Secretary of State to quash or reduce unreasonable charges, recent instances where shipowners have invoked this procedure have shown it to be ineffective.

Again, the procedure has been extremely slow – up to 18 months for a decision. To offer a satisfactory remedy to an active dispute, a response needs to be provided within weeks, not months. The test applied to determine whether a charge is reasonable or not is, in any case, unsatisfactory. The Department considers only whether the charge raises sufficient income to fund the Harbour Authority's statutory duties, with no test that compares the reasonableness of the charge at issue with the service being offered to a particular ship. This absence of any assessment of 'value for money' is counter-intuitive and bizarre.

The way forward

The Chamber recognises that solutions to some of the problems identified above will take time. Developing a holistic approach to economic and environmental priorities within ports policy will require consultation across Government. Changes to UK law to give statutory protection to wharves and to European law to remove the presumption against construction of new port infrastructure will both take time.

But the changes are worth pursuing. They would remove the main threats to the future health of the UK ports industry and would put it on a firm and sustainable footing – to serve shipping companies and shippers, local transport needs, and the UK's national interest.

CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS GOODS BY SEA

Chris MacRae MA (Hons)
CMILT MIHT MCFI TechIOSH
Rail Freight and Global Supply Chain
Logistics Policy Manager,
Freight Transport Association

Readers of previous editions will have noticed that each time this author writes an article about carriage of dangerous goods, the comment is made that “different rules apply to carriage by sea than by land”. At that point readers probably groan, but are reminded that the European land transport rules allow that goods in a transport chain involving sea or air as well as land can pack, mark, and label (as well as document) the goods for sea/air and that will be acceptable for land as part of a combined journey. This does not, however, take account of all of the modal-disharmonies. But, the reader asks, why are the rules for sea different from those for land, when after all, all of the rules on the carriage of dangerous goods come from UN recommendations?

Why then are there such differences? This year's article features a look at some of those differences for sea transport and some current developments in this area, principally:

- Flashpoints on documents;
- Environmentally hazardous substances;
- Retail distribution: domestic ferries;
- National exemptions and variations;
- Stowage and segregation.

The maritime environment

First of all, the maritime environment needs to be considered. Many factors need to be borne in mind here:

- The different types of ship – container or ro-ro;
- Variations in sea conditions, on even comparatively shorter distance crossings, involving dangerous and difficult sea conditions, such as Scotland to Northern Ireland;
- Accompanied or un-accompanied lorry trailers (or indeed vans) on ferries;
- Voyage duration, ranging from minutes to hours or days. Compare Southampton to the Isle of Wight to crossings from Scotland to the Western Isles, or to Northern Ireland;
- The distance from land, for example, trans-atlantic crossings;
- Some vessels may be carrying cargo in addition to passengers. The classification of the passenger ship is relevant; for example on inter-island journeys in the Western Isles of Scotland exemptions can be given if there are low numbers of passengers.

Ship construction standards and the associated Document of Compliance form, in effect, an ‘MoT’ for a ship, and determine where cargo can be put on board.

Flashpoints on documents

The International Maritime Dangerous Goods Code (IMDG) requires (unlike the rules for transport of dangerous goods by other modes) that flash points be quoted on the dangerous goods shipping note. This requirement has been in existence for as long as the author and any of his contemporaries can remember, and is used for stating stowage conditions on a ship but is interlinked with ship classification. The flash point is used as an indicator of the flammability of the product, and is a parameter used to determine the UN classification and packing group. It is required to be shown on the transport document if the goods are carried by sea and is used on a ship for stowage and emergency response.

14 Shipping marks	15 Number and kind of packages, description of goods	Gross mass (kg)	Net mass (kg)	Cube (m ³)

Dangerous Goods Declaration

To aid multi-modal harmonisation, the UK maritime competent authority, the MCA (Maritime and Coastguard Agency), proposed to the International Maritime Organisation (IMO), who revise the IMDG Code on a bi-annual basis, to remove the need to declare the flash point on the transport document. This was discussed at IMO in September 2005 but the change was not adopted. There were inter-related concerns about training of seafarers, ship construction and stowage.

Environmentally hazardous substances (marine pollutants)

Changes to align with the new classification criteria in the UN Model Regulations on the transport of dangerous goods will come into force with Amendment 34-08 of the IMDG Code on 1st January 2010. Why so far in the future, readers may ask? Well, this is a somewhat complex process and involves changes to conventions (including MARPOL Annex III on marine pollutancy) and timings of meetings.

So, what has been agreed? In view of the decision at the UN Sub-Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods (UNSCoETDG) in Geneva in December 2004, IMO decided to retain the use of the term ‘Marine Pollutant’ rather than use the term ‘Aquatic Pollutant’. The criteria adopted by the UNSCoETDG will also be adopted under MARPOL Annex III, and there will be a single category – 'Marine Pollutant' rather than this and the category of 'Severe Marine Pollutant' as at present.

It was decided to have a non-exhaustive list of confirmed marine pollutants, as existing entries in the IMDG Code index were felt to be serving the needs of users adequately. To remove an entry from this list, the user will have to submit data to support the proposal for deletion. Self-classification by the consignor against the new UN Environmentally Hazardous Substances classification criteria will also apply. The term 'Marine Pollutant' will need to be quoted on the transport document (the UNSCoETDG has not picked up the term 'Aquatic Pollutant' as proposed). The new dead fish and tree symbol will replace the current Marine Pollutant mark (as illustrated below).

Retail distribution: domestic ferries

All dangerous goods carried on ships must comply with the IMDG Code. However, modern retail logistics operations depend on the ability to break down the outer packaging of retail dangerous goods to allow the inner packaging to be put into a shop transit box to be taken direct to the shop and placed on the shelves for customers to buy. Guidance on the road distribution of such goods produced by DfT with FTA (in the shape of the author of this article) already exists at: www.dft.gov.uk/pgr/freight/dgt/cdgr/docs/notes/dftdgguidancenote7

For sea transport, therefore, two options existed: either to modify the IMDG Code with all of the complexity of negotiations at IMO that that would involve; or to issue domestic guidance. The latter route has been chosen and guidance drafted by the MCA with FTA (in the shape of the author of this article). This draft guidance will only apply to limited quantities as per Chapter 3.4 of the IMDG Code. It will identify how the conditions of the Code can be met with an equivalent level of safety, including the use of distribution packaging systems such as distribution boxes, crates, 'tote' boxes etc. However, such must meet the UN definition of a box, including having a secured lid. The use of crates such as those shown in the illustration top right is NOT permitted.

The guidance will also address segregation within a distribution box, where the IMDG Code conditions will apply, and the segregation provisions of the Code for limited quantities within vehicles where they are dis-applied will be reflected. The IMDG Code requirements for documentation will apply. For marking of the distribution box there will be no change for single UN numbers (required to be shown within a diamond shaped area) but for multiple UN numbers the options of the ADR road rules will be copied. In addition, the letters 'LQ' in a diamond-shaped area will be allowed as an option instead of all the UN numbers being required to be shown. See illustration below.

Multiple UN numbers, either or

It is important to note that this guidance will not be applicable to goods where the destination of the sea voyage is outside of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. (Application to journeys to the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands will be dealt with separately as they are not parts of the UK but are subject to the Crown.) The plan is for the guidance to be issued as an MCA Marine Guidance Note (MGN 342).

National exemptions/variations

On this wider point, it is worth remembering that the IMDG Code regulates carriage by sea of all quantities of dangerous goods. Relaxations may be possible for domestic as opposed to international transport (as above) but similar relaxations for international transport requires an IMDG Code exemption which has the agreement of both the exporting and receiving countries. As discussed above, the proposed MGN 342 on Carriage of Dangerous Goods will cover retail distribution of limited quantities, and also the proposed MGN 340 will deal with carriage of small quantities of gas cylinders for trade, medical and personal use. It will be distributed for consultation via the internet and trade associations.

Stowage and segregation

These are two very important sets of requirements in the IMDG Code. Stowage is about where and how the goods are carried on a ship and how goods are loaded into transport units. Segregation is about the types of dangerous goods that have to be separated and by what distances. As regards stowage, factors include containerisation versus ro-ro as well as flash point issues. Segregation includes issues such as basic chemical compatibility and reactions. Also, shippers sometimes get the segregation requirements between Cargo Transport Units (CTUs) on ships confused with the mixed loading and mixed packing of packages within a CTU.

Summary

In summary, then, the IMDG Code applies to carriage of all dangerous goods on all ships. The sea transport element of the UK supply chain can be considered as:

- Domestic roll-on roll-off or load-on load-off (unaccompanied trailers)
- Regional roll-on roll-off or load-on load-off
- Short-sea containerised transport
- Deep-sea containerised transport

However, there are variations within these groups according to classification of ships, carriage and numbers of passengers and sea conditions. The UK can apply domestic variations, but they have to be agreed by both the shipping line and the consignor / carrier and demonstrate an equivalent level of safety to that in the provisions of the IMDG Code.

The Freight Transport Association represents the interests of companies moving goods by road, rail, sea and air. FTA members operate over 200,000 goods vehicles – almost half the UK fleet. In addition, they consign over 90 per cent of the freight moved by rail and over 70 per cent of sea and air freight.

FTA provides training for carriage of dangerous goods by all modes of transport including for shippers by road and sea.

TRANSPORTING FREIGHT BY WATER

David Hilling, MSc PhD,
Inland Waterway Freight Group
Vice-President, Inland Waterways
Association

Why should the transport of our past become the transport of our future?

There is an historic legacy in the UK of investment in existing transport modes drying up once a new one comes along. The rapid decline of the canals in the UK in the 19th century reflected the movement of financial investment to the growing railway system. During the 20th century, the UK rail network contracted progressively with the development of road transport. In the 21st century, however, in the face of mounting road congestion and increasing concern for the environment, it is certainly time to consider the case for greater use of waterway transport.

It is true that loading and unloading waterway vessels for some cargoes is time-consuming and expensive, although modern techniques and the move to containerisation are changing this. Nor would anyone suggest that waterways have a widespread role in local distribution. However, water transport is ideal for bulk, non-perishable cargoes and unitised loads. Examples include bulk cargoes such as grain, aggregates, coal, petroleum products (to distribution depots and large users), chemicals (to depots and large users), waste and cement; unitised cargoes (containers and swap bodies); steel and other metal; forestry products; heavy-lift and out-of-gauge project cargo.

Advantages

- Waterways are multifunctional

In contrast to other modes, well-designed waterway track may be multifunctional, providing opportunities for landscape enhancement, wildlife conservation, recreation, pedestrian access, land drainage, flood protection, water transfer, and hydropower generation, some of which may contribute towards offsetting, or sharing, the costs involved.

Photograph: John Pomfret

- Water transport uses less fuel – which means less pollution

The greater fuel economy of waterborne freight transport means scarce resources are conserved and pollution is reduced. In the EU, transport accounts for about a quarter of all carbon dioxide (CO₂) emissions, about 40 per cent of volatile organic carbons (VOC) emissions and up to 90 per cent of carbon monoxide (CO) emissions in some countries. Road transport alone contributes 45 per cent of emissions of nitrogen oxides (NO_x). Wider use of waterborne freight transport would contribute to reducing air pollution. For example, CO₂ emissions could be reduced by at least 75 per cent compared with road transport. Because of the difficulties of incorporating environmental costs into the market economy, choice of transport mode usually does not take full account of environmental issues.

- Water transport is quiet

About 65 per cent of the European population is now exposed to average noise levels exceeding 55dB(A) and the greatest single contribution to this is road traffic – dominated by tyre/road noise. Waterway transport emits negligible noise by comparison.

- Waterways use less land

In terms of land-take in relation to carrying capacity, waterways are more efficient than rail or road.

- Waterways are cost-effective

Costs of providing infrastructure and vehicles are broadly similar between transport modes. Annual costs of vehicles per unit of carrying capacity are similar, taking account of the longer life of waterway vessels, compared with the smaller capacity and shorter life of heavy goods vehicles used for road transport. Crew costs for each unit of transport depend on the relative capacities and speeds of the vehicle used. Water transport competes most effectively over longer distances and with larger craft. However, water transport can compete over even a few miles with smaller craft when it serves an origin-destination movement.

The revival of inland shipping

The Inland Waterways Association campaigns for the greater use, restoration and development of Britain's canal and navigable rivers. There are already well-publicised examples of inland waterways transporting cargoes. The Government's decision in June 2006 to transport waste by barge to its new energy-from-waste plant at Belvedere on the river Thames, is one such example. High profile abnormal loads have also been transported by barge, for instance British Airway's last surviving Concorde. Even now, water transport carries more freight than most people appreciate – around 49 million tonnes a year. In 2004, 24 per cent of the goods moved in the UK were transported by water whereas only 8 per cent were transported by rail.

Photograph: John Fletcher

The London 2012 Olympics offer a unique opportunity to develop transport of freight by water. It has been suggested that improvements to the River Lea and Bow Docks in East London could save 500,000 lorry journeys as well as providing the infrastructure to service homes and businesses after the games.

A recent report by Transport for London and British Waterways estimated that development of the Grand Union Canal in North West London would allow for the transportation of 640,000 tonnes of waste, recycling and building materials a year. In fact, January 2007 saw the first barge traffic move through a new wharf in Willesden, which was built to serve a new state-of-the-art recycling plant.

Photograph: John Pomfret

Photograph: John Pomfret

Outside of London, in March 2006, Gloucester Docks saw its first freight by barge in 30 years. The barges in question are travelling 14 miles from Worcestershire to a concrete plant south of Gloucester, where one barge journey takes the place of 20 similar journeys by lorry.

Looking to the future

There is also much scope for developing existing waterways. The River Trent, for instance, could be developed into a major barge waterway to serve a freight terminal near the M1. Similarly, enlarging the River Severn to a multimodal terminal downstream of Worcester, accessible by river-sea ships would be ideally suited to serve the Midlands via the M5 motorway.

In some cases, existing waterway capacity is grossly underused and traffic could be increased greatly at minimal cost by minor improvements such as dredging. Under the present administrative system, this is not addressed as a matter of routine, as it would be for a road or railway. The commercial climate over recent years has favoured considerations of short-term gain over long-term planning, mitigating against waterways, where most assets have long lives. However, on some waterways, only modest investment is required in improved, or new, wharves and inland port facilities to allow intermodal transfer.

As part of the national charity, the Inland Waterways Association (IWA), the Inland Waterway Freight Group continues to promote the transport of freight by water. The transportation of freight on Britain's canals and inland waterways is not only an important part of their history but also an integral part of their future.

The Inland Waterways Freight Group is part of The Inland Waterways Association's Navigation Committee and campaigns for greater use of inland waterways for freight transport.

THE WAY FORWARD FOR RAIL FREIGHT

Paul Martin,
Director General,
The Railway Forum

As the recently appointed Director General of The Railway Forum, I am delighted to support the Freight Industry Yearbook for 2007.

Publications such as this provide an invaluable guide to the industry and I am confident that users will find it to be comprehensive and authoritative.

While The Railway Forum currently represents companies which are mostly in the passenger rail market, some of our key members, such as Network Rail, the rolling stock companies and industry suppliers, are also vital to the freight industry.

The issues currently facing the railway industry, particularly the challenge of providing the capacity to meet the continuing high increase of both freight and passenger traffic and the growing importance of environmental sustainability can only be met with a concerted effort by all parts of our industry.

Transport and the environment

Both the Eddington and Stern Reports have demonstrated the key role that transport has to play in reducing carbon emissions. From being a half-hearted matter of corporate social responsibility, environmental sustainability has become a major priority for both the Government and the governed.

The railway industry has for many years rested happily with the view that it is demonstrably vastly more environmentally friendly than road or aviation. There is a danger that we have, as a result perhaps, lapsed into some complacency. The road industry has invested substantial resources into improving its environmental performance and the aviation industry has also been actively facing its challenges.

If the railways are to maintain their lead in this area, we too need to make the investment required to meet the demands of the future. With large numbers of polluting diesel engines still on our lines, we need to look urgently at the extension of electrification and the development of new fuels for the future.

While The Railway Forum has warmly welcomed many of the recommendations in the recent Eddington Report, we do see a need to have urgent research into more ambitious projects to meet the demands of the post-2014 UK market for rail.

Infrastructure development

Consideration of the business case and viability of a new dedicated North-South freight line and a new high-speed passenger line must be two of the key projects. These could do much to relieve congestion on existing lines, while at the same time contributing to the economic growth of the conurbations around cities such as Birmingham, Manchester, Leeds, Newcastle, Edinburgh and Glasgow.

St Pancras International

Eddington's proposals for longer trains, longer platforms and improved signalling to enable heavier track usage are all practical, achievable and most welcome. They alone will not, however, be capable of meeting the estimated growth in capacity needed by the middle of the next decade.

Eddington's concern at 'grands projets' being wasteful of public funds, prone to considerable delay in implementation and considerable under-estimation of final cost are understandable. The railway industry can, however, point to the recent great achievements of the Channel Tunnel development, the Docklands Light Railway and the Jubilee Line extension. All have been considerable successes and have brought substantial economic benefits to the areas they serve.

The current development of the new High Speed 1 (HS1) line from St Pancras to the Channel Tunnel and the transformation of St Pancras Station show how such great projects can be delivered on time and within budget. What a waste it would be if the highly-experienced team which is delivering that project were allowed to dissipate. They should, instead, provide the ideal project team to follow up the HS1 line with HS2 and 3, just as the motorway network developed in the second half of the last century.

All within the railway industry rejoice at the way in which it has flourished again in recent years. The original development of the railways was the result of people of great vision investing in the future. Surely the United Kingdom, with its strong and successful economy can provide the vision to take us on to meet the needs of the future?

I look forward to working closely with freight industry over the next year to ensure that we together do all that we can to help our industry meet its great potential.

RAILWAYS PUTTING DISTRIBUTION BACK ON TRACK

*Andy Griffiths,
Managing Director,
ProLogis Developments*

From the invention of the modern steam engine in the early 1800s, to the second half of the 20th century, rail freight was the prime method of transportation used by manufacturers to carry their goods around the country. Then, following rationalisation in the 60s and the subsequent decades of under-investment that followed, the railways went into decline and road freight became king.

Just 40 years later, however, the railways are making a bit of a comeback, and the distribution and logistics market is increasingly using rail freight to get goods delivered, on time, and at a reduced cost, to the manufacturers, retailers and the environment.

It is still early days, and there have been a few setbacks and stalling, but there are definitely encouraging signs that point to a rail freight rebirth, with significant uptake of the railways expected in the next few years. "When you consider the state of our roads in the 21st century, this is to be welcomed," says Andrew Griffiths, Managing Director of ProLogis Developments Ltd, the UK's leading specialist developer of distribution warehouses.

"The UK's roads are almost at a standstill through congestion, and businesses are losing money through delays," he said.

"Retailers and manufacturers need to get their goods delivered on time, to meet the supply chain demands of their businesses and, in turn, the distribution and logistics industry has to keep its own costs down to stay competitive. Rail freight could be the solution, because it's economical, it's more reliable and it's much better for the environment. "

More and more high street retailers are using rail freight, including Sainsbury's, Argos, Marks & Spencer, ASDA and Superdrug. Figures from the Rail Freight Group reveal that, since 2000, Britain's rail freight operating companies have bought more than 400 brand-new Class 66 locomotives and in excess of 3,000 new wagons. In the last ten years, the industry has grown by almost 50 per cent, increasing its market share of surface transport to 11.5 per cent, and it has attracted more than £1.5 billion of private investment.

This has helped to remove many thousands of lorries off the roads and cut millions of miles in road journeys. It has the added advantage of being able to shift much larger quantities of cargo in one journey. With the prospect of road-user charging and regional congestion charging on the horizon, a shortage of lorry drivers, restriction on drivers' hours and ever-worsening road traffic, increased rail use looks set to continue.

"This has to be good for everyone concerned, particularly the distribution and logistics industry," says Andrew Griffiths. ProLogis UK has consistently developed more than three million square feet since 1998, including some of the most high-profile schemes in the country, for leading brands such as Honda, Amazon, Debenhams, Marks & Spencer, Screwfix and Sainsbury's. The company has a philosophy focused on sustainable construction and design, and its investment in rail-linked developments is a natural extension of this, reflecting rail's environmental credentials.

"We have been supporting rail connected development for many years," says Andrew Griffiths. "As well as being a much more efficient system for distribution companies, rail usage can make considerable carbon savings. For example, a typical two-metre square-foot development, with all occupants using rail facilities, would save around 35,000 tonnes of CO₂ per annum, which is a huge saving on carbon emissions."

ProLogis is a supporter and founder member of the Rail Investment Interchange Group (RIIG), the organisation that provides a focus point for a number of distribution developers, who believe in the future of rail freight and the requirement of their respective customers for rail served logistics buildings.

ProLogis Park Coventry – September 2006

ProLogis Park Coventry

The company has developed numerous rail-connected facilities in the UK. At ProLogis Park Coventry, there is no intermodal facility, but many of the buildings on site are rail-connected, and changes in demand from one customer led to EWS running a train from France, transporting bottled water for Danone to the DHL unit on the park.

"The development of ProLogis Park Coventry did not include an intermodal facility and we believe this was a major reason as to why the occupiers of the scheme were slow to use the rail connection,” says Andrew Griffiths.

“The inclusion of an intermodal facility would have made rail on the Park accessible to the wider commercial hinterland, not just the Park’s occupiers. Furthermore, the major growth in UK rail freight has been in intermodal traffic, which generally arrives in containers that require an intermodal facility rather than side-loaded units which were provided at ProLogis Park, Coventry.”

ProLogis Park Coventry – January 2007

Daventry Rail Freight Terminal

ProLogis also owns the Daventry Rail Freight Terminal (DIRFT), at J18 of the M1 in the East Midlands, which has become widely recognised as one of the pre-eminent terminals in the UK. The site includes an intermodal rail facility and will support more than 1.9 million square feet of new industrial development in Phase Two of this scheme.

Over at Centre 38, Barton Business Park, near Burton, ProLogis has developed the 125-acre rail-connected park, in a joint venture with St Modwen Properties PLC. The Park has rail sidings, currently being used by Bombardier, that could be utilised by the other existing occupiers, Argos and Pirelli. Argos imports a significant amount of goods from the Far East into the ports on the east coast of the UK.

ProLogis will also be promoting strategic rail freight facilities at further sites it has acquired in Newton-le-Willows and Corby.

Andrew Griffiths said: “We believe that the changes in global trade, and specifically the growth of goods from the Far East in the form of containerised traffic via ports, underpin the use of rail for the movement of freight. The ability to provide both intermodal facilities, and rail connected buildings, allows our customers the ability to receive any combination of goods. This is the most flexible solution.”

The cost of providing rail to a distribution scheme is significant, and for an intermodal facility to prove attractive to an operator it needs to be in an area where there will be acceptable local demand. “However, if the scheme itself is large enough to generate a base line of movements, this will help the facility to get established,” he adds.

“For occupiers to gain the benefit of rail connected sites, they need to be allocated and developed. Development of these sites, especially in the South East, has been slow, but this is because of a number of factors: The necessary due process of the planning system; rail infrastructure (capacity and connection) issues; the necessary scale of sites and facilities; and, of course, cost.

He adds: “Current growth in rail freight on the back of globalisation, and significant and rapid changes in corporate social responsibility policy, combine to create an opportunity to create a self-sustaining virtuous change in the proportion of goods being transported by rail. We believe rail freight is a vital component to providing a more sustainable logistics solution for the UK.

“But here lies the challenge – moving freight by rail will inevitably require interchange with other modes and, while most of the UK’s major ports are developing or reinstating their rail links, most of the inland rail freight interchanges have been lost to redevelopment, or no longer suit the requirements of modern industry.

“Securing a major shift of freight to rail, therefore, means we must create more of these ‘inland’ ports from which to distribute more efficiently throughout the UK.”

There are broadly two choices available to move consumer goods by rail:

- By conventional wagon, with fully-enclosed, side-loading rail wagons;
- By intermodal means, using standard, end-loading deep-sea shipping containers or end/side-loading swap bodies to enable unit loads – or even entire trainloads – to be transferred quickly between rail, road and sea.

Mr Griffiths said: “The industry needs a network of interchanges that can cater for these two rail freight ‘prime movers,’ along with other key features, including strategic regional locations relative to the main road and rail networks, linked to the ports, mainland Europe, other regional interchanges and population centres.

“We have had false dawns before, but it is vital that we get these inland intermodal ports operational as soon as possible, to facilitate the momentum of rail freight, which is of paramount importance to the success of the distribution network and economy.

ProLogis is one of the world’s largest providers of industrial distribution facilities, with operations in 79 markets across North America, Europe and Asia, and more than 388 million square feet of industrial space in 2,340 buildings, representing over $22 billion of assets owned, managed and under development. These strategically-located state-of-the-art facilities help customers like DHL, Nippon Express, Unilever and Wal-Mart to meet the needs of their customers wherever they are throughout the world.

Since being founded in 1991, the company’s vision has been to serve customers by focusing on their needs, and ProLogis pride ourselves on a deep understanding of the logistics industry and on striving for excellence in everything it undertakes. ProLogis’s network of around 830 property professionals offers comprehensive, flexible solutions to the world’s most dynamic manufacturing and supply chain companies.

ProLogis acknowledges the direct, beneficial impact the active reduction of CO₂ in the day-to-day operation of distribution facilities and the supply chain will make and, as an example of its commitment to the cause, and forward thinking, the company has become the first real estate developer to join the Chicago Carbon Exchange (CCX). This will allow ProLogis to become a global aggregator of carbon, whereby it ‘collects’ the carbon savings from its developments and makes these savings available to its customers. It is hoped that the carbon will then be ‘retired.’

2007 IS THE YEAR OF RAIL FREIGHT!

Tony Berkeley,
*Chairman,
Rail Freight Group*

The year 2007 has been declared the year of rail freight by the European Commission. This marks the full liberalisation of the European rail network for freight on 1st January 2007. In the UK, this year will also be significant in seeing the publication of the Government's Rail Strategy and the decision by the Office of Rail Regulation on how much rail freight will have to pay to use the rail network.

Of course, the UK has had this for some years, and most other member states are well behind in implementing the policy that should encourage fair competition and transparency. Nevertheless, it is a significant event, and provides a focus for reflecting on what have been the successes and failures in rail freight, and the challenges that lie ahead.

The publication of the Stern Report on the economics of climate change, and the Eddington Report on our long-term transport needs, together provide the opportunity for an in-depth look at sustainable transport. They show what can be provided and at what cost – to business, to the public and to the environment – both in terms of its carbon footprint and other adverse effects.

The European Commission have declared 2007 the year of rail freight

How much will rail freight have to pay to use the network?

CONSULTANCY SERVICES 'FROM BOARDROOM TO BALLAST'

Lloyd's Register Rail, a member of Lloyd's Register Group, is a leading specialist which provides consultancy services to the rail industry. It provides services to help improve rail systems safety, quality and asset management worldwide.

The company has an excellent reputation for professional performance and employs highly experienced railway engineers and technical specialists, with proven track records. It specialises in rail systems integration and safety assurance, founded on core rail skills in all key rail disciplines, including rolling stock, signalling, telecommunications, civil engineering, power systems and operations.

Leading areas of experience include business support, risk assessment, system assurance, safety case preparation and independent safety assessment.

Services in economic and strategic disciplines are provided by BSL Management Consultants, the transportation management consultants in the Lloyd's Register Group. BSL Management Consultants focus on the economic, organisational and corporate governance issues in the public transport sector.

Coupled with the skill set and experience in Lloyd's Register Rail, the company offers a detailed understanding of railways and their operation.

With offices in UK, Germany, The Netherlands, Korea, Hong Kong, Singapore and Australia, and with a global team of over 500, the company provides a combined 'board room to ballast' capability in engineering, safety, risk and strategic and economic management.

The Lloyd's Register Group stands apart: independent, objective, experienced and uncompromising in their commitment to helping their clients.

LIFE MATTERS

Rail freight is between 2.5 and 10 times better on carbon emissions compared with road freight

There is no easy answer and, at present, there is little evidence either of Government taking on board these recommendations, or even of any joined-up thinking between different departments on what to do. In recent years, the Government has increased the costs of rail compared with road travel and transport, when all the evidence suggests that, on all accounts, it should have continued with the fuel duty escalator whilst seeking to encourage the greater use of public transport and rail freight.

I believe that much can be done to reduce carbon emissions by industry as well as by members of the public. It will need changes of Government policy and incentives to achieve this, but it is doubtful if persuasion will be enough.

Given the emphasis on the polluter paying the full internal and external costs of the damage incurred, it is sad, but not surprising, that Eddington goes so strong on the need to grow air transport, to keep up with other countries and to ensure that the UK remains competitive, without accepting that it fails to pay anything like the full cost for its emissions. He also pays lip service to rail, whilst putting the main emphasis on road user charges as a way of constraining demand for surface transport.

However, the key issue is to have good evidence to support policy changes, and for rail freight, the figures are good – on carbon emissions, rail freight is between 2.5 and 10 times better on carbon emissions compared with road freight. The range depends on which data set is taken, particularly on road transport, but even three times represents a very significant difference, particularly when Stern quotes a value of £45 per tonne of carbon.

Rail freight, then, is set to grow – the amount depends largely on the competitive situation with road. At present, rail freight represents about 12 per cent of the land transport market, but of course on the longer distances, where rail tends to operate, this is a significant percentage – we are not so good on deliveries by milk float!

Within an overall forecast of around 40 per cent growth in tonne-miles in ten years, the trend is to move freight longer distances with the tonnes lifted remaining more constant. Goods are getting lighter! In bulk materials, we see some growth, but the future of coal, and over how many miles it is transported by rail, is in the hands of the generators and reflects whatever is the Government's energy policy.

One of the main growth sectors is in domestic and international container movements. These move between major conurbations as well as to and from ports and, significantly, travel on the same routes as those identified by Eddington as key rail routes needing particular attention in terms of capacity and capability.

Given that Eddington did not support high-speed rail lines, the capacity for growth in passenger and freight traffic – alongside better capability such as gauge enhancement, facilities for longer trains and heavier axle weights – will have to be found by upgrading existing lines. Alternatively, it could be achieved by building additional freight capacity on separate tracks or routes. According to Network Rail, this is a very much cheaper option than building a new high-speed passenger line. Whatever solution is chosen, some major capacity enhancement of the network will be required to be in place in the next ten to twenty years. There is synergy with some passenger enhancements and longer trains mean the need for fewer of them.

Domestic and international container movements are among the main growth sectors

SCT Europe Ltd

In 2006 SCTE introduced the Barber Easy Ride range of primary suspension freight bogies. First and foremost Easy Ride was designed to be a safe, reliable bogie. Manufactured from high tensile and proof strength cast steel to provide enhanced fatigue resistance, the bogie frame is designed to give a minimum of 30 years service life.

Easy Ride, the World's newest Track Friendly bogie

Track-friendliness, as measured by the track settlement method, is now a minimum requirement for UK freight bogies. Designed to induce low lateral and vertical track forces and steer in curves, Easy Ride surpasses the entry level track-friendliness requirements and sets the standard for the next generation of RCF friendly bogies.

SOUTHAMPTON • FELIXSTOWE • TILBURY • BIRMINGHAM • MANCHESTER • LEEDS

We have welcomed the December 2006 announcement from the Department for Transport towards funding of gauge and capacity enhancements for freight – Southampton Midlands, Gospel Oak Barking, Peterborough-Nuneaton, Olive Mount chord at Liverpool and capacity enhancements to the Humber ports.

The capacity and capability needs on such main routes are therefore critical to the future of rail freight – as well as passenger traffic. The Government has stated that it will publish its railway strategy in the summer of 2007; we are pressing them to include for the needs for both freight and passenger traffic alongside evidence as to how this will benefit the carbon footprint of UK transport.

It is a pity therefore that the Government has so far failed to impose a proper link between taxes and environmental damage – a so-called green tax.

In transport, one could include the various road taxes and duties, a lower but still significant duty on fuel used on the railways.

If Government is serious about 'green taxes' then it could start in the next budget to move transport taxation and duties to reflect the full environmental and other damage done by each mode. It must also allow Network Rail to enhance the rail network to accommodate the growth that will inevitable come as a result of such policies!

MANCHESTER AIRPORT WORLD FREIGHT TERMINAL

Michael O'Connor,
*Cargo Manager,
Manchester Airports Group*

The global gateway

Located at the heart of the UK motorway network, Manchester Airport has established itself as a fast growing centre for UK freight operations; 60 per cent of UK industry and 75 of the UK's top 100 companies can be found within a two-hour drive.

As the principal UK gateway outside London, the airport itself offers an excellent route network, with more than 100 airlines, serving over 200 destinations, across five continents. Continuous investment has led to sustained growth for the airport, with reflected benefits for the World Freight Terminal, which now boasts 55,000 square metres of warehouse and office space. Five industry-leading cargo-handling companies and five global logistics providers are located on site, while around 100 freight forwarders and agents are on the airport site next-door.

With its recently expanded EU Border Inspection Post and a temperature-controlled warehouse for perishable products, the World Freight Terminal can handle every kind of cargo. Yet there remains potential for growth. Around 50,000 tonnes is still trucked from Manchester to other European hubs. This should be flying out of Manchester.

All-cargo B747 operations already well-established at Manchester include daily flights from Hong Kong by Cathay Pacific and Dragonair and three flights a week from Taipei by China Airlines. Dubai features as an intermediate stop on most of these services, with Delhi also being served twice weekly.

There are four daily flights to New York, two a day to Chicago and daily or near-daily flights to most of the main US hubs, plus three destinations in Canada. Going east, there are 15 flights per week to Pakistan, two daily services to Dubai and daily operations to Singapore, Abu Dhabi and Doha. New routes are being added all the time, with Etihad Airways (the National Airline of the United Arab Emirates), Biman Bangladesh and Virgin Atlantic amongst several joining the list in the last year.

The World Freight Terminal has successfully developed services to meet the needs of industries and shippers in the region, identifying key growth sectors such as aerospace, automotive, food and drink, biotechnology and ICT and then ensuring services match these profiles.

Current capacity is expected to accommodate cargo growth until 2015, by which time the annual throughput is anticipated to reach 250,000 tonnes.

Whether you are a shipper, a logistics provider, freight forwarder or airline looking to exploit one of Europe's biggest airfreight markets, the World Freight Terminal at Manchester Airport makes sound commercial sense.

NEW CARGO FACILITY FOR GERMANY

Ute Weber,
*Manager,
Cargo Business Development
Cologne Bonn Airport*

Cologne Bonn Airport is to begin construction of a €22 million multi-modal freight facility later this year. The 14,000m² handling facility is to be operational by mid-2008. Aviapartner, LH Cargo, Cologne Bonn Airport and forwarders are in negotiations with the airport to fill the 10,000m² of warehouse space. The additional 4,000m² will provide office space for prospective occupants.

The new facility will be situated on the periphery of the airport so that trucks can load and unload with ease and the freight can be transported to the Customs area, without so many personnel having to undergo timely security checks.

As well as working to attract forwarders Cologne has been busy building its freighter operations, concentrating on traditional cargo during daylight hours, rather than express.

Cologne Bonn Airport is to open a new multi-modal freight terminal in Summer 2008. Photograph: Cologne Bonn Airport Flughafen Köln/Bonn GmbH

British Airways World Cargo now routes three B747-400s through the airport, to Shanghai and Hong Kong.

MNG is also operating four freighters from Cologne to Istanbul.

The latest addition to its scheduled freighter services is TAP Air Portugal, which began flying to Lisbon with MNG's A300Fs twice a week on 24th January 2007.

We are very glad about the development of the airport's cargo services. It took some time to grow these from express driven operations. But the future of traditional cargo looks promising for this year and we hope to meet 740,000 tonnes of freight in 2007.

INLAND CLEARANCE DEPOTS

An Inland Clearance Depot is a place approved by H.M. Customs to which any goods imported in containers may be removed for entry, examination and clearance. The container must be produced at the port of arrival in the UK for inspection, locking and sealing before proceeding to the Inland Clearance Depot. A similar procedure applies for goods intended for export.

West Lothian

The Forth Road Bridge crosses the Firth of Forth between the counties of Fife and Lothian on the A90 west of Edinburgh and there are connections with the M8, M9 and M90 motorways.

The toll charge per single journey is £1 for goods vehicles not exceeding 3.5 tonnes unladen weight and £2.00 for all other vehicles. Coaches and buses over 16 passengers, £1.40.

A new tagging system is being phased in from summer 2007. Details on website for wide loads and dangerous goods.
